"He will never return to politics," was the confident reply. "He has a high notion of the dignity of the Presidential office. He will try to remain on the pedestal which he thinks it has set him on. His ambition was to be continued by suffrage in an office which chance had given to him, but that disappointment will not affect his future. He will neither take a lower place in politics nor return to the practice of law. He is not very rich—probably he will retire from the White House with less than a hundred thousand dollars to his name. He had more than that when elected Vice-Ppresident, but his expenditures have ever since exceeded his income. His social disbursements in the Capitol are greater than those of any preceeding President and his efforts to get a renomination were very costly. However, he will live the rest of his days in dignified retirement from all business. And he will do it elegantly, He has made friends too who will enable him. They will not make him an object of charity, but they will make it possible for him to so employ his moderate fortune that it will afford the income of a great one. The Astors are under obligations to him for sending Waldorf Astor to Italy as United States Minister. They are just now showing their gratitude to him by lionizing him at Newport, and how easy it would be for them to put him in the way of immensely remunerative real estate investment. He has within a month been entertained by Astors, Belmonts, James Gordon Bennet and other millionaire people, irrespective of party adherence, Most of these friends he has made while President. His social hold on them is firm. They will never let it be necessary for him to work for a living. He will be an ornamental ex-President and perhaps occasionally useful in a nonpartizan public way, but he will never let himself down to any pursuit for a livelihood."

THE reduction of the public debt last month was about $13,000,000.

THE Prohibitionists already have full state and electorial tickets in nearly or quite 20 States of the Union, and are increasing in number

THE Prohibitionists in Maryland have nominated candidates for Congress in two of the districts of the state, and avow their intentions to make nominations in all the rest.

IT is stated in Madrid, that the United States has offered to largely reduce duties on sugar and raw tobacco imported from Cuba in return for reduced Cuban duties on American cereals.

ON Tuesday of next week, October 14th, the election in Ohio and West Virginia will take place. The great fight is in Ohio. The Republicans now seem confident of a majority and will no doubt get a small one. From Ohio the fighting material will be removed to New York State. West Virginia is considered a doubtful State.

JOHN MCCULLOUGH the great actor has been obliged to leave the stage on account of his physical condition and it is no doubt a fact that he has left it for all time. In Chicago the other night he was hissed in "The Gladiator" in which he forgot his lines and his acting was a failure. Death has also taken from the colony of actors, Frank Chaufeau. Thus ends the stage career of two great men.

GOV. CLEVELAND will visit Brooklyn October 16. Preparations are being made by the Democratic campaign committee for a great demonstration. Messrs Hendricks, Hoadly, Abbott, Waller, Seymour, Randall, Eaton, Bayard, Hancock, Thurman, Pendleton, Schurz, Patrick Collins and other prominent men are expected to be present, and many of them will speak at the public meeting, after which there will be a grand barbecue in Ridgewood park and torchlight procession.

MR. BLAINE took a trip into West Virginia this week and used his manitism on the people of that state. He returned, however, to Ohio where he is using his oratory powers to good advantage. Blaine's majority will be much smaller than that of Garfield; which was 34,000. Last year the tables were reversed and Judge Hoadly the Democratic candidate for Governor carried the State by 12,000 plurality. It is safe to say that the Republicans will carry the State.

IN the last issue of THE TIMES was published a communication in which the writer from his view of the question discussed the advantages derivable from a free trade system. In this issue we have a brief answer which we think "does up" our free trader handsomely. We wish our readers to know that our columns are always open for discussion of important questions of the day by any clear minded citizen and that in publishing such communication it does not necessarily imply that THE TIMES sanctions or advocates such a theory. Under the present management THE TIMES has been run as a strictly independent paper and it is our intention to maintain this position in the future.

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND visited Buffalo last Thursday for the first time since his nomination. Great preparations were made by the people of Buffalo to give their honored citizen a grand reception. The Governor left Albany late in the afternoon arriving at Buffalo about 8 o'clock in the evening. All the principal streets in the city were handsomely decorated with lanterns and flags. Clubs from Syracuse, Rochester and immediate towns joined the Buffalo clubs in welcoming home the Governor. The procession consisted of about 15,000 men, and lasted over two hours. A hard rain set in during the afternoon and continued through the evening, but the enthusiastic crowd paid but little attention to the weather. A speech of welcome was made by Mr. Martin of Buffalo and was replied to by the Governor in an appropriate manner and was loudly applauded. The Governor spent Friday in calling on old friends and returned to Albany in the evening.

There was $755,000 in gold shipped from London to New York, Saturday.

Ex-Senator T. Grady has accepted an invitation to address the people of Oswego on the issues of the day and in behalf of Butler, on Monday evening October 20.

CURE FOR PILES.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a very common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying [illegible]

CHEESE MARKETS.

[From the Utica Herald.]

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 6, 1884.

Nobody was surprised to see cheese go ⅛c. higher to-day, and everybody was pleased and satisfied with the result except the few who sold too soon and did not get the top price in consequence. On account of the activity in the market there was consinerable fun going and jokes on some of the leading salesmen current. But every body felt happy. Cheese brought as much as it did a year ago to-day, and as this is the first time it has done so this summer or fall, it was a thing to rejoice over. There was no holding back to-day, and some even shipped eight and nine days instead of seven. To-days' sales take cheese off to the 12th, and all the way from that to the 16th of September. It is safe to say that four tenths of the September cheese is sold, but it will take at least two weeks more to clean it out.

Transactions of the day include six lots, 509 boxes, at 11¼c.; two lots, 97 boxes, at 11⅜c.; 58 lots, 5,414 boxes, at 11½c.; three lots, 230 boxes, at 11⅝.; 13 lots, 1,750 boxes, at 11¾c.; two lots, 250 boxes, at 11⅞c.; four lots, 400 boxes, at 12c., and 150 boxes, p. t. Sales, 8,800 boxes; commissions, 400; total, 9,200 boxes. Ruling price, 11c. This compares with 8,166 boxes a year ago, and 7,040 two years ago. Next week the sales should be a thousand boxes less.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

There has been a lively trade in cheese here to-day. Competition was unusually animated and strong, and prices were advanced beyond what most dealers believed were the legitimate bounds of the market. Till quite late it was thought that 11¾c, would be the extreme price, but as soon as one buyer paid 12c. others were obliged to come to this figure or lose the goods desired. Fine and fancy cheese appeared to be in usually good demand, and it was late before it was determined who was to secure several of the best lots. The cheese sold to-day is all September make, and includes upon the average, the stocks of factories up to about the 12th. Following are the transactions:

Lots	Boxes	Price
3	110	11¼
49	3,535	11½
41	3,908	11¾
14	1,395	12
1	80	p. t.
18	1,025	Com
132	9,067
Farm Dairy	780
Total	6,533

FARM DAIRIES.—Sales of farm cheese amount to 780 boxes; prices ranged at 9¾ and 11¾c., the bulk going at 11¼c.

BUTTER.—There were 98 packages of farm dairy butter sold at 23 and 25½c., the bulk going at 24c and 25c. Forty-five packages of creamery butter brought 28c.

AT FULTON.

The market Monday evening was not very brisk. Salesmen are now holding back for higher prices. About 700 boxes were disposed of at from 11¼ to 11½ cents. Utica ruling was 11½ cents.

How Watch Cases are Made.

This process of manufacture was invented by James Boss, who started in business in 1854, and the methods and tools used in making these watch cases are covered by patents. This is the only watch case made under this process. For many years the introduction of these goods was slow, owing to popular prejudice against "plated" goods, but gradually the public learned that the James Boss' Gold Watch Case was not a cheap gold-washed or electro-plated article, but was made of genuine gold plates of standard quality and thickness. Conscientious adherence to the determination to make the best watch case ever put on the market, and the adoption of every improvement suggested, has made the James Boss' Gold Watch Case the STANDARD. In this watch case the parts most subject to wear—the bow, crown, hinges, thumb-catches, etc., are made of SOLID GOLD.

Send 3 cent stamp to Keystone Watch Case Factories, Philadelphia, Pa., for handsome Illustrated Pamphlet showing how James Boss' and Keystone Watch Cases are made.

SPECIAL BARGAINS.

To be Found Every Day and Evening at McCarthy's China Hall.

At China Hall it is proposed to clear the decks for the fall campaign and for this reason the bargains are better than ever. This is saying a great deal of a house which has always been famous for selling goods lower than any other crockery firm in Central or Northern New York. But Mr. McCarthy does not believe in allowing goods to get stale on his hands and keeping up his principle of always showing a constant succession of novelties. He is disposing of staple stocking up for the fall is at hand and McCarthy wants room and is going to have it and the way to get it is to sell better goods than other firms at lower figures. We might refer to particular lines of goods and point out special bargains but that would be a task of too great labor. The proper way to find out whether McCarthy does as he advertises is to go to China Hall, No's. 2 and 4 Jefferson block, Oswego, and take a look through the immense stock, and, if, after you have done so, you do not say

Democrats Ratify.

The Democrats of this place held a meeting in Stephens opera house last Wednesday evening. Previous to the meeting the members of the Young Men's Cleveland and Hendricks club assembled at their club rooms where they formed in line for a march. A few members of the Hendrick's club joined making about 100 men. The Fulton band headed the line from their rooms to the opera house. A display of fireworks enthused the outside crowd for some little time. At about 8 o'clock the house was filled.

Mr. G. S. Piper called the meeting to order and after a few remarks nominated Mr. Willis S. Nelson for chairman.

Mr. Nelson on taking the chair returned thanks and asked the pleasure of the meeting.

Mr. W. C. Stephens moved the election of the following gentlemen for vice presidents, which was adopted:

Dr. C. G. Bacon, W. D. Patterson, Oscar Hannis, Myron Havens, Thomas Richards, George I. Wells, Geo. Berzee, A. G. Morse, Levi Candee, William B. Howard, Jay M. Piper, Michael Edick, Alanson Dodge, Ezra Hoagland, S. B. Whitaker, Capt. T. Becker, William Betts, Patrick Powers. Lewis Sharp, James Wiltze, Geo. Wood, James Dobbins, Fred Somerville, Joseph LaLonde, W. A. LaFountain, Job Bennett, Mac Stewart, F. E. Bacon, Charles Briggs, John C. Dresser, George Johnston, Jerome Rector, Patrick Cullen, M. Butler James Caldwell, James Doyle, Nopoleon Gowen, J. W. VanVorst, Michael Neiler, William Roberts, Ira Carrier, Dr. D. Pardee, James Parker, Peter Conley, M. M. Greeley, Patrick O'Grady, N. B. Randall, Hulbert Parker, Henry M. Howe, Abram Howe, James Bardner, J. H. Cavanaugh, John Murphy, C. M. Sabin, H. K. Jones, James Gilhooley.

On motion of Mr. G. S. Piper the following were elected secretaries.

Wm. J. Lovejoy, E. V. Lathrop, Harry Baker, Peter Stevenson, Frank Cornell, Castle Gardner, Frank Richardson, James Curran.

Before introducing the speaker, the chairman announced that he was informed that Dr. L. Reynolds of Oswego, a veteran democrat, was in the hall, and invited him to a seat on the platform.

William A. Beach of Syracuse was then introduced. He read a number of Mulligan letters in which he undertook to show Blaine's connection with the Little Rock railroad and made a few remarks about the necessity for a change of administration. Mr. Reynolds then made a few remarks, after which the Hon. Mr. Bulger of Oswego addressed the meeting in his usual eloquent style. The meeting closed with three cheers for the candidates.

Banner Raising.

The Blaine and Logan club of this village visited Lower Oswego Falls on Monday evening last, to participate in the raising of a banner on the Schenck. place. The club marched through Hannibal, Worth and First streets headed by the band. Many residences were handsomely decorated and others illuminated. C. H. Gardner and Waugh displayed a fine banner across Hannibal street. About 8:30 o'clock, p. m. the club marched to the residence of G. F. Schenck where a large crowd of people had assembled. A ninety foot pole had been raised and a banner was flung to the breeze. Fred Bennett was called on for a speech and responded by saying he never made a speech and did not know how, but he made a few remarks. S. B. Mead was introduced by Mr. Bennett, who made a stirring speech and was heartily applauded. Fred Schenck followed with closing remarks, saying he thought it fitting to erect the pole and flag representing the Republican party as the home by which it stood had been a Republican home since the formation of the party, and two of its members had lain down their lives for the party and the country in the war of the rebellion. With three more cheers for Blaine and Logan the club marched away.

A Card to the People.

To my friends and other Fultonians who I hope soon to have the pleasure of meeting personally I wish to say that having leased your Opera House for a term of years it will be my endeavor to manage it so that it will meet with your approval and liberal patronage. It is not always an easy matter in the small towns and cities to secure first class attractions, but I have been quite successful here at my home and hope in running the two together to be still more successful in the future. The Lecture Course that Mr. Stephens has partially arranged I will carry out if a certain number of season tickets can be sold. I will give you something definite in a few days in regard to names and dates for same. Mr. F. D. VanWagenen jr., has kindly consented to assist us in arranging the course and season tickets will be on sale at his office. Also any local matters relating to renting the Opera House he will look after for me. Season tickets also on sale at Watson's drug store.

Yours very respectfully,
H. HOWARD,
Baldwinsville, N. Y., 10, 1884.

The first political meeting of the campaign in Phœnix will take place at Windsor hall, Wednesday evening, October 8th, to ratify the nomination of Blaine and Logan. Hon. L. E. Carr will address the meeting and there will be a torchlight procession composed of clubs from Baldwinsville and this village. The Fulton Glee Club will sing and the Phœnix band play.—[Phœnix Register.

On Monday about 10 p. m. an exciting contest took place on the fair ground track between two athletes of this place. It was a mile run for half a dozen bottles of "Mumm's Extra Dry." They started in first class shape, showing evident care in training, but on the home stretch one of them had a sunstroke and as a consequence had to buy. Time, 4:57.

AT a meeting of the tobacco association at Danville, Va., Monday, the retiring president gave figures of the trade showing the acreage last season. Virginia and North Carolina have greater than the average acreage by twenty per cent. and the yield is 90 per cent. of the average. The stock of old tobacco in the markets is unusually short and there is a fair prospect for next years' business.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to Messrs Rosenbloom's announcement in another column. This enterprising clothing firm are offering special inducements this season. One would think after going through their store and looking over their large stock that they had bought out some wholesale house. Their goods are well selected, excellent in quality and cheap. It costs you nothing to visit them and be convinced.

Daniel G. Fort, a former resident of Oswego, died in Chicago Monday. He was at one time cashier of the Lake Ontario bank and collector of the port of Oswego, and mayor of the city. He was also elected to the assemblies of 1872 and 1873. Two years ago he secured the general agency and superintendency of the Thompson & Houston Electric Light company for the state of Illinois, and went to Chicago. Deceased was father of Mrs. James F. Herrick who has the sympathy of this community in her sorrow.

H. H. Howard, proprietor and manager of the Baldwinsville Opera House has leased the Stephens Opera House of this place and will take possession the first of next month. In the management of his own opera house Mr. Howard has been very successful and has given the best of satisfaction to the citizens of Baldwinsville. The prospects now are that lovers of amusement of this village will have an opportunity of attending many first class entertainments the coming winter, and if so we bespeak for Mr. Howard full houses.

Another Roller Skating Rink.

It is quite evident that the roller skating rink business is somewhat contagious. James T. Pratt & Co., are making arrangements for the erection of a new rink on the vacant lot belonging to the N. Y. O. & W. railroad, on the corner of Cayuga and Second streets. The Midland freight house and one or two other buildings will be removed from the lot. A petition was presented to the Village Board Monday evening by N. N. Stranahan, esq., who appeared for the company in asking the privilege to build the rink, a wooden building, inside the fire limits. The consent of the board was obtained. The dimensions of the building will be 120 feet by 70 feet. The location is most favorable being in the central part of the village. We understand that considerale money will be expended in fitting up this rink and that it will be furnished with every convenience possible. Fulton can support two rinks very nicely. The work will be commenced at once and will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

At the Rink Last Evening.

The announcement of Miss Hattie Harvey's appearance at the rink last evening brought out an immense crowd, the largest the rink has ever had. The champion lady skater of America made her appearance on the floor about nine o'clock and was greeted with applause. She held the close attention of the audience during her performance. Her movements are graceful and artistic. The feats performed are wonderful, eliciting the admiration of all. Miss Harvey will appear again this evening. Do not fail to see her.

Oswego Falls Democratic Club.

A meeting was called in Johnston's hall in Oswego Falls last Thursday evening for the purpose of organizing a Cleveland and Hendricks club. James Gilhooley called the meeting to order. E. M. Baker was elected chairman and David Hartigan secretary pro tem. The following permanent officers were elected: For president, John Crahan; first vice-president, Thomas Connors; 2d, Wm. G. Betts; secretary, E. A. Hagan; corresponding secretary, John Sullivan; treasurer, John Mahar. The club consists of about forty members. Another meeting was held last evening.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

The Oswego Palladium of Saturday says: A desperate attempt was made last night to wreck the passenger train that arrives in this city over the N. Y. O. & W., at 10:30 p. m., west of Fulton. A pile of logs was placed across the track, and the locomotive struck them with sufficient force to throw them off the track. Fortunately no cars left the track. It was a narrow escape. The affair will doubtless be investigated.

Chauncey M. Depew.

This evening Chauncey M. Depew, of New York, one of the greatest orators of the day will deliver an address in the Academy of Music at Oswego. Those wishing to attend the meeting will be carried from Fulton to Oswego and return, on the D. L. & W. RR. at half fare. Train leaves Fulton at 6:24 p. m., and returns after the meeting.

A dispatch from New York says: In 1865 Willard Johnson of Fulton, Oswego county, was made administrator of the estate of William Baldwin. Mr. Baldwin was a wealthy contractor of this city, who was one of the builders of the Croton aqueduct, and during the war had large contracts with the government. Lieutenant W. S. Baldwin of the United States navy, on behalf of himself and other heirs, has called on Johnson for an account of the property, which, the heirs allege, has never been presented. They assert that $40,000 at least is accruing to them from claims against the government paid to Johnson and from other sources. Johnson presents counter claims against the estate amounting to $100,000. Baldwin's heirs aver that these claims are not valid, inasmuch as many of them are outlawed by the statute of limitations and others are old claims that were paid. The matter was brought up in the surrogate's court Saturday and referred to Albertus Perry.

An Answer to the Free Trade Article.

To the Editor of THE FULTON TIMES.

Permit me through the columns of your paper to say a few words in reply to an article in your last issue advocating free trade. That article is an attempt to show that every State and nation should devote themselves to those industries for which they are naturally fitted or are superior. Labor would thus be economized and benefits equalized among the peoples of the Earth.

This being the argument we would leave it here, for it is an Utopian idea and as such could do no harm, but in it we detect a plain effort to hold out the system as one desirable for us as a nation to adopt. Briefly we would say:

1st, That we do not believe in reducing all nations to a common level.

2d. That we do not believe in throwing down our protection barriers and permitting all foreign races to flood our lands with their numbers and in their numbers to lose our individuolity and be forced back to serfdom.

3d Holding such beliefs, we acknowledge that we are selfish and as protectionists, feel that our nation by protection (selfishness) has reached a higher plane than many nations and that she can reach by protection a still higher one.

IN EFFECT free trade means that our wages shall be determined by the wretched ignorance and starving people of England, Ireland, France, Germany and the rat eating people of Italy, China and the east: and that the same people shall close our factories, furnaces and workshops and drive our workmen not to be profitable tillers of the soil, but to the same wretched existence as their own. We must be brought to their level. In our nation's history three attempts have been made to adopt free trade and the financial panic and prolonged depression following these times, 1819 1837 and 1857 are still remembered by many yet living.

Our free trader speaks of wages. Let him remember that those chief articles of consumption, bread and meat, are bought here cheaper than in any European country, and that our wagas are 50 per cent. higher. The statistics in regard to England we grant. But why such results? The official records of the vast thousands chained to starvation and ignorance of the taste of meat, home or happiness, give plain answer.

If our friend has confidence in his theory we shall be pleased to meet him in argument in public or private or through the columns of newspapers.

Skating Rink Attractions.

A large audience assembled at the rink last Saturday evening despite the unpleasant weather to witness the five mile race for the championship of Oswego county. The contestants were Charles Eggleston of Oswego, and Charles W. Clark of Fulton. The race was called about 9 o'clock. John Hatcock of Fulton, and Mr. Stone of Oswego were appointed judges and John McKay of Fulton, scorer. Clark took the lead on the start and held it. Eggleston was taken with a severe pain in the side on the last half of the second mile. The race was exciting and close and will be repeated again next Saturday evening. The beautiful gold medal is awarded to the champion who is obliged to win two races. The next promises to be more interesting and exciting. To-morrow evening the obstacle race will occur. This is a laughable race and will draw a large crowd. The managers are securing the best attractions and are highly commended by the public for their efficient management of the rink.

Wonderful, but True.

There are two boys in the town of Lysander, whose names are Field, writes a correspondent of the Baldwinsville Journal. They are twins. One of these boys is, or will be a voter on the 4th of November next; the other is not a voter, and can not legally vote on the 4th of November. The one who can vote will cast his first ballot for James G. Blaine. The other would so cast his first ballot were he old enough.

Now, in view of the fact that they are twins, how can the fact be accounted for that one is a voter and the other is not? The facts are these: The voter was born precisely six weeks before the one who cannot vote. There is six weeks difference in their ages. They are strong, fine looking boys. The father is a farmer, and the boys are both farmers also. The facts presented are extraordinary, but are literally true. Dr. McCarthy says the facts attending the case are wonderful.—[Syracuse Journal.

A Russian newspaper states that the three emperors adopted a proposal to permit Austria to annex Bosnia and Herzgovina.

Sir John MacDonald left Ottawa for England, Monday morning. It is rumored that he will be raised to the peerage before his return.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1884.

About sixty million copies of The Sun have gone out of our establishment the past twelve months.

If you were to paste end to end all the columns of The Suns printed and sold last year you would get a continuous strip of interesting information, common sense wisdom, sound doctrine, and sane wit long enough to reach from Printing House Square to the top of Mount Copernicus in the Moon then back to Printing House Square, and then, three-quarters of the way back to the Moon again.

But The Sun is written for the inhabitants of this earth; this same strip of intelligence would girdle the globe twenty-seven or twenty-eight times.

If every buyer of a copy of The Sun during the past year has spent only one hour over it, and if his wife or grandfather has spent another hour this newspaper in 1883 has afforded the human race thirteen thousand years of steady reading, night and day.

It is only by little calculations like these that you can form any idea of the circulation of the most popular of American newspapers, or of its influence on the opinions and actions of American men and women.

The Sun is and will continue to be, a newspaper which tells the truth without fear of consequences, which gets at the facts no matter how much the process costs, which presents the news of all the world without waste of words and in the most readable shape, which is working with all its heart for the cause of honest government, and which therefore believes that the Republican party must go in the coming year of our Lord, 1884.

If you know The Sun, you like it already, and you will read it with accustomed diligence and profit during what is sure to be the most interesting year in its history. If you do not yet know he Sun it is high time to get into the sunshine.

FASHION NOTES.

Felt round hats are worn to match woolen suits.

Green is the prevailing color for autumn and winter bonnets.

New traveling cloaks are made with capes which form sleeves.

For simple bonnets smooth felt is chosen for general use and plain velvet for nicer wear.

Galloon, velvet bands and wings thrust in velvet loops are the trimmings for felt hats.

The wedding veil is of tulle and is very long and full and mounted with jewelled pins.

A tailor-made cloth suit, in pale gray or light brown, is the correct traveling dress for a bride.

The crowns of bonnets are made of the richest materials embroidered with silver and gold.

Clasps of wood or metal prettily carved are sometimes used on black mantles in the place of buttons.

Jackets and mantles of the dress material will be worn with cloth or velvet dresses, but not with silk or satin.

Ottoman velvet is chosen for elegant wedding dresses, except for very young brides who prefer white satin.

Thrifty girls are buying the plain white braids and embroidering them in color for the trimming of winter suits.

Three, five or seven rows of ribbon velvet make the fashionable trimming for dress skirts at this moment in Paris.

Velvet ribbon loops and a bunch of feathers directly in front are almost the only trimmings seen on round hats.

The high square, or slightly tapering crowns are most used for round hats, the brim being narrow and quite even all around.

The new beaded trimmings are rendered novel and effective by some of the beads being dull, some faceted, giving the effect of jewels.

The richest passementries and embroideries, colored braids and jet, gold [illegible], and chenile are lavishly used for trimming dresses and cloaks.

The walking jacket is the most popular outside garment at this season. It should be, "Tailor" cut, solid in color, and trimmed only with braid, stitching and buttons.

A novelty in velvet round hats is to have the top of the crown soft and sides covered with gathered velvet forming two puffs. The brim is covered plainly and edged with galloon.

Some pretty new capes made for autumn wear are almost in the shape of a half shawl, but they are really very carefully cut on the shoulders. One end is fastened up to the throat by a cluster of ribbon loops and the other is similarly caught at one side of the waist. They are sometimes made of little plaid shawls.

Facts for Farmers.

Use clean seed.

Plant some trees.

Be sociable at the fair.

Keep the harness clean.

Sow rye for early [illegible].

Burn weeds that are in seed.

Free the granaries from vermin.

A good ditcher makes a narrow ditch.

Buckwheat is deleterious to the hop louse.

The honey crop is unusually heavy in many parts.

A Massachusetts farmer has fifty miles of stone fence.

Gen. Putnam, of revolutionary fame, was a very successful farmer.

In England soldiers may work on farms in catching harvest weather.

Potatoes may be dug before they are dead ripe, if wet weather threatens.

Posts will last longer if stones, instead of earth, are used for filling in the holes.

Mix a little sulphur in their feed occasionally, to keep lice from the fowls.

Frequent applications of the grease of salt bacon, it is said, will destroy warts about horses ears.

Don't complain if you get no premiums at the fair; remember your own judgment is, in the nature of the case, biased.

An experiment made in plowing several lands of corn ground only four inches deep, using two teams, indicates that the yield per row from the shallow plowed will not be more than one half of that of the rest of the field.

SOMETHING FOR ALL PREACHERS.

Rev. H. H. Fairall, D. D., editor of Iowa Methodist, says editorially, in the November (1883) number of his paper:—"We have tested the merits of Ely's Cream Balm, and believe that, by a thorough course of treatment, it will cure almost every case of catarrh. Ministers, as a class, are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly." Not a liquid nor a snuff, Applied to nostrils with the finger.

Why She Wept.

The prettiest girl at a Sancelito picnic the other day was observed to act in a most explicable manner. She peremptorily refused to dance, swing or climb the rocks after ferns. Later in the day she was found by another girl weeping bitterly under a bush.

"What on earth's the matter, Gussie?"

"Why, you see, Sophy," sobbed the weeper, "I can't have a good time nor enjoy myself a bit. I started off in such a hurry this morning that I forgot to put on my other stockings!"

Thus "conscience makes cowards of us all," etc.—[SanFrancisco Post.

How Watch Cases are Made.

The process of manufacture was invented by James Boss, who started in business in 1854, and the methods and tools used in making these watch cases are covered by patents. This is the only watch case made under this process. For many years the introduction of these goods was slow, owing to popular prejudice against "plated" goods, but gradually the public learned that the James Boss' Gold Watch Case was not a cheap gold-washed or electro-plated article, but was made of genuine gold plates of standard quality and thickness. Conscientious adherence to the determination to make the best watch case ever put on the market, and the adoption of every improvement suggested, has made the James Boss' Gold Watch Case the STANDARD. TRADE MARK In this watch case the parts most subject to wear—the bow, crown, hinges, thumb-catches, etc., are made of SOLID GOLD.

Send 3 cent stamp to Keystone Watch Case Factories, Philadelphia, Pa., for handsome Illustrated Pamphlet showing how James Boss' and Keystone Watch Cases are made.

LIFTED OUT.

In what way a Watervleit Farmer was Sent Back to his Plow.

Leaving the cars of the New York Central Railroad at a pretty little station called Kamer, and driving three miles back in the country, you reach the fine, well kept farm of Mr. Jacob Cardell, Deputy Sheriff and Commissioner of Highways for the town of Watervleit. In the sunshine of a bright day last summer a traveler who had heard something of his history, visited Mr, Cardell, and said as he marked the hale appearance of the farmer: "Can you be the man whom they told me of in Albany as having been almost raised from the dean?"

"Perhaps I'm not quite entitled to that distinction," he answered half laughing, "but I was lifted out of a serious situation, that is certain For fifteen years I had kidney disease in the worst form. I obtained but little rest day or night, so extreme was the pain in the small of my back. I tossed upon my bed, as pititable an object as ever attracted the sympathy or excited the disgust of a sound man. Of course my business was neglected and my farm went to rack. All this came from catching cold in a camping out expedition, and I came near camping out in the cemetary as the end of all."

"If the doctors couldn't cure you—as I assume they couldn't—what on earth did you do?"

A CURE FOR GRAVEL.

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement You May Confide in.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

Albany, March 20, 1881.

Dr. David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than methods of obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your FAVORITE REMEDY I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer frrm gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three year ago your FAVORITE RMEDY was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence; I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,

Nathan Ackley.

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraiser's office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for disease of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and digestique organs, KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY oas fairly won its high reputation. Write if desirable to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

O, wizard month! again thou'rt here,
And all the sunsets of the year,
With skillful touch thy magic weaves
To wrap around thy dying leaves,
And crown with royal pomp and glow
The sky above, the earth below.

In some enchanted loom were wrought
These tints that human art ne'er caught,
And airy sprites, by Jack Frost led,
The work with dainty fingers sped,
Till tree and shrub, in robes of fire,
Like martyrs, unto Heaven aspire.

From seas to seas of splendor tossed,
In waves on waves of color lost,
Thy days fade out, and fancies throng
Upon the heart, and drift along
You blazing pathway of the sun,
We see God's saints walk, one by one.

A POSTAL COURTSHIP.

"She really is the prettiest little creature I ever saw," said Mr. Willougby Vane, as he turned from the window for the fifteth time that morning. "Jane," he added, addressing the housemaid, who was clearing away the breakfast things, "have you any idea who the people are who have taken old Mr. Adderly's house opposite?"

"Well, yes, sir, if you please," returned the hand-maiden. "I met their cook at the grocer's the other day, and she said that her master's name was black—Capting Choker Black—and that he was staying here on leave of absence with his wife and daughter, sir."

"Oh, indeed; did she mention the young lady's name?"

"Yes, sir; she called her Miss Eva."

"Eva! What a charming name!" murmured Mr. Willougnby to himself; and then he added aloud:

That will do, Jane, Thank you."

Mr. Willoughby Vane was a bachelor, 28 years old, rich, indolent and tolerably good looking. He lived with a widowed mother in a pleasant house in Albany, and having nothing else to do, had fallen desperately in love with his pretty vis a vis, and anxiously sought an opportunity for an introduction. However, having discovered the name of his enchantress, he determined to address her anonymously by letter.

Having decided to take this step the next thing to be done was to put it into execution and having shut himself into his little study, after many futile attempts, he succeeded in framing an epistle to the lady to his satisfaction, begging her, if she valued his peace of mind, to return an answer to "W. V., Postoffice, Albany." That done, he went out for a walk, and dropped the letter in the nearest box.

Regularly three times a day for a week afterward he called at the post-office to see whether an answer had arrived for him. As the week advanced Willoughby began to lose his appetite, and grew so restless and irritable that Mrs. Vane like a fond mother, fancied that her dear boy was unwell, and begged him to consult their medical attendant. But her son laughed at the idea, knowing well that his complaint was beyond the doctor's skill to cure.

He was beginning to despair of ever receiving a reply, when, to his great delight a letter was handed to him by the postmaster, written in a dainty female hand, and addressed to "W. V." Almost unable to conceal his emotion, he quitted the post-office, broke open the seal and devoured its contents.

They were evidently of a pleasant nature foi he read the letter over and over again, kissed the envelope, put it in his breast pocket and hurried home to see his inamorata looking out of the window as usual,

For a moment his first impulse was to salute her respectfully; but immediately he bethought himself that as he was still incognito, the young lady would perhaps feel insulted by the action. Besides, how could she have any idea that he was "W. V." So he went indoors and amused himself for three hours in inditing a reply to her letter, which he posted the same afternoon, and in due course a second answer arrived.

And so matters went on, a constant interchange of letters being kept up for a fortnight, during which time Mr. Willoughby Vane spent his days in running to and from the post-office, writing letters and watching his fair neighbor from the window of the dining room.

"Confound it!" he would sometimes say. How very provoking the dear girl is! She will never look this way. I do wish I could catch her eye, if only for a moment. What a horridly sour looking old crab the mother is! Depend upon it, Willoughby, that poor child is anything but happy at home with those two old fogies. Indeed her letters hint as much." And having given vent to his feelings, he would put on his hat and walk to the post-office or shut himself in his room and compose another note to his "Dearest Eva."

At length, three weeks having run down rapidly in this manner, he received a letter one morning which ran as follows:

"To 'W. V."

Sir—As it is useless to continue a correspondence in this manner, I think it is now time for you to throw off your incognito, and reveal your true name and condition to one to whom you are not totally indifferent. Believe me that nothing inspires love like mutual confidence. Prove to me that I have not been imprudent in answering your letters by at once informing me who you are. It is with no feeling of idle curiosity that I ask this, but simply for our mutual satisfaction. Yours, etc.

EVA.

To which Willoughby replied by return of post:

DEAREST EVA (if you will permit me to call you so): Have you not for weeks past observed a young man, with his hair brushed back, assiduously watch you from the window of the opposite house? And although you have apparently never taken the slightest notice of him, I trust that his features are not entirely repulsive to you. I am that individual.

"Charmed by the graceful magic of thine eye,
Day after day, I watch and dream and sigh:
Watch thee, dream of thee, sigh for thee alone,
Fair Star of Albany—may I add, mine own?"

—to quote with some alterations the noble stanza of the poet Brown. And now I have a favor to ask you. Whenever you see me at the window take notice of me at present, lest my mother should observe it. In a few days she will be going out of town, and then we can throw off all restraint. Till then adieu. Adieu, my adorable one, adieu. My eyes are ever on you. Your own,

WILLOUGHBY VANE.

To which epistle came the following answer:

DEAR SIR:—Your explanation is perfectly satisfactory. I may also add that your features are not all repulsive to EVA.

"Bless her! What a delightful little soul she is!" ejaculated Willoughby.

Hud he went out, ordered a new suit of clothes and had his hair cut.

"Willy," said Mrs. Nane to her son the next morning. "I wish you would do something to improve your mind, and not waste your time looking out of the window all day as you have lately done. Come and read the Assembly debates to me if you have nothing else to do."

The worthy lady was a red hot politician, and for three mortal hours she kept him at his delightful task; at the expiration of which time he succeeded in escaping to his own room, where he wrote the following note to Eva;

DEAREST EVA—I am overjoyed at the the contents of your brief communication. If, as you say, my features are not altogether repulsive to you may I hope that some day you will be mine—mine only? WILLOUGHBY.

Back came the reply the next morning:

DEAR WILLOUGHBY—Your reply has made me feel very happy. I am very dull here—no society except father and mother. I long for more congenial companionship. Thine, EVA.

In this delightful manner the days flew on—halcyon days, too, they were for Willoughby, and sweetened by the interchange of this and similar lover-like correspondence. On the following Monday morning Mrs. Vane left town on a visit to some friends in Saratoga, leaving her son to keep house at home. The same afternoon one of Captain Black's servants brought the following note for Willoughby:

WILLIE—Have you any objection to my telling my dear papa all? Matters have now gone so far that it will be impossible for either of us to retract what we have written. Let us take papa into our confidence. I know his kind and generous nature well, and have no fear that he will oppose our union. Pray send me a line by bearer. EVA.

The answer was as follows:

"MY OWN EVA: Do whatever you consider best. My fate is in your hands. If your papa should refuse his consent, I——. But I will not think of anything so dreadful. Fear not that I shall ever retract. Life without you would be a desert, with no oasis to brighten it. Yours until death.

"WILLOUGHBY."

That evening just as Willoughcy had finished dinner, he heard a loud double knock at the street door, and on its being opened a strange voice inquired in a loud tone:

"Is Mr. Willoughby Vane at home?"

His heart beat violently as Jane entering the room, said:

"A gentleman wishes to speak with you in the library, sir."

And she handed him a card, inscribed "Captain Choker Black. 10001st Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y."

"I will be with him in a moment," said Willoughby; and he swallowed a couple of glasses of sherry to nerve him for the interview,

"Captain Choker Black, I believe?" he said as he entered the library.

"Your servant, sir," said the gallant captain, who, glass in eye, was busily engaged in scrutinizing an engraving of the Battle of Gettysburg. "Your Servant, sir. Have I the pleasure of addressing Mr. Willoughby Vane?"

Willoughby bowed.

"Then, sir, of course you know the business that has brought me here?"

Terribly nervous and scarcely knowing what answer to make, our hero bowed again.

"Come, come, sir, don't be afraid to speak out! My daughter has made me her confidant, so let there be no reserve between us. Eva has told me all!"

Here poor Willoughby blushed up to the roots of his hair.

"You see, I know all about it. You have fallen desperately in love with the poor girl; and although you have never exchanged these words together, you are already engaged to be married. Mighty expeditious, upon my word! Ha! ha! ha!"

As the captain appeared to be in a very good humor, Willoughby's courage began to rise.

"Don't mention it, sir. You are her father, and have a right to do what you please. But I sincerely trust that you have no objections to offer."

"I? None! Believe me, I shall be delighted to see my Eva comfortably settled. But, hark ye, sir. Business is business. I am a plain, blunt man, and fifteen years' sojourn with one's regiment on the plains doesn't help to polish one. First of all, what are your prospects?"

And the captain drew a note-book out of his pocket and proceeded to examine our hero as is he was in a court of justice.

"You are an only son, I believe?"

"I am."

"Good." And down went the note in the pocket-book.

"Your age?"

"Twenty-eight next birthday."

"Twenty-eight! Good. Is your constitution healthy?"

"I believe so. I have had the measles, whooping-cough and mumps."

"Disorders peculiar to infancy. Good." And the captain scribbled away again.

"Are you engaged in any business or profession?"

"None."

"Then how on earth do you live?"

"On my private income, captain."

"Then all I can say is you're an uncommon lucky fellow to be able to subsist on that. I only wish I could. What is your income?"

"About four thousand a year."

"Is it in house property, shares in limited companies, or in 'Governments?' If in public companies, I should be sorry to give two years' purchase for the lot."

"In the new four per cents."

"Good. I think I may say very good. What sort of temper are you?"

"Well, that's rather a difficult question to answer," said Willoughby, smiling for the first time.

"Hang it, sir, not at all!" returned the captain. "If any one asked me my temper, I should say, 'Hasty, sir—confoundedly hasty!' And Choker Black's proud of it, sir—proud of it!"

"Say about the average." answered Willoughby, timidly.

"Temper average," said the captain, jotting it down. "I think these are about all the questions I have to ask you. You know my daughter by sight?"

"I have had the pleasure of seeing her frequently—from the window, sir!"

"And you think you could be happy with her?"

"Think, captain! I am certain of it."

"Very good. Now, hark ye, Mr. Willoughby Vane. Marry her, treat her well and be happy. Neglect her, blight her young affections by harshness or cruelty, and hang me, sir, if I don't riddle you with bullets! Gad, sir, I'm a man of my word, and I'll do what I say as sure as my name's Choker Black!"

"I have no fear on that score, captain. Unite her to me, and if a life of devotion——"

"I know all about that," said the captain. "Keep your fine phrases for the girl's ears. Give me your hand, sir. I've taken a fancy to you?"

"You flatter me, captain!"

"Hang it, sir, No! Choker Black never indulges in flattery. Don't be afraid to grasp my hand, sir; it is yours as long as I find you plain sailing and straightforward. But if I ever suspect you of any artifice or deception, I'll knock you down with it. So now I hope we perfectly understand each other."

"One word more," said Willoughby. "Am I to understand that you consent to our union?"

"Certainly. You can be married tomorrow, if you please. Sir, the happiness of my dear child is my first consideration. Gad, sir, I am not a brute—not one of those unnutural parents people read of in novels. Choker Black may be a fire-eater on the field; but, at any rate, he knows how to treat his own flesh and blood."

"Captain you overwhelm me with gratitude."

"Say no more about it. Clap on your hat and come across the street with me, and I'll introduce you to my daughter at once."

Scarcely knowing what he was about, Willoughby did as he was told. They crossed the street together, and the captain opened his door with a latch key.

"One moment, if you please," said Willoughby, who was titavating his hair and arranging his cravat.

"Are you ready now?" asked the captain.

"Quite!"

"Mr. Willoughby Vane!" cried the captain, ushering our hero into the drawing-room. Then, waiving his hand, he added, "Allow me to introduce you to my wife and daughter.'.

Willoughby looked exceedingly foolish as he bowed to the two ladies. On a couch by the fireside sat his enchantress, looking more bewitchingly radiant than ever, her vis-a vis-being the tall, thin, angular woman in black that he had frequently noticed from over the way.

"What a contrast," thought Willoughby, between mother and daughter!'

"Annie, my dear, Mr. Willoughby Vane is nervous no doubt. You know the adage. Let us leave the young people together, and he'll soon find his tongue then, I'll wager," said the captain, addressing the younger of the two ladies, who immediately rose from her her seat.

"Stay, sir—there is some mistake here, said Willoughby. "This lady is—and he pointed to the gaunt female.

"My daughter, sir,' said the captain.

"My daughter by my first wife.'

"And this——ejaculated our hero, turning to the young lady.

"Is my second wife, sir"

Mr. Willoughby Vane fled from his home that night. About a month later his almost broken-hearted mother received a letter from him explaining the whole affair; and the postmark bore the words: "Montreal, Canada.

FASHION NOTES.

Hook and eyes are now much used on dresses in place of buttons.

Velveteen dresses are much used for serviceable walking suits.

Cuffs are very narrow. They are worn with small stud buttons of hammered silver.

Boys wear round turn over collars of medium width in white linen or dotted purcale.

Military jackets are made of gray or navy blue cloth with velvet collars, cuffs and lapels and silver or gold buttons.

The newest sleeves are pointed at the the top and extend upward between the shoulder seams to within two inches of the collar.

Tasteful combination dresses of silk and velvet have the basque and drapery of grosgrain with a vest and lower skirt of stamped velvet.

For stout figures the draperies are now placed three or four inches below the belt and are sewed there upon the foundation skirt.

Velveteen suits are made with long Polish overdress with a plain under skirt bordered with fur or trimmed with rows of wide silk galloon.

Corset covers, etc., trimmed with lace and insertion, have very narrow poppy-red ribbon velvet run in the insertion and tied in short double bows.

Revers cuffs for sleeves are formed by turning back the end of the coat sleeve to make a three-cornered revers, and facing it with contrasting material.

The new point Espagnole lace, which is chalk white, and of silk meshes worn with small dots and scallops, is used in the neck and sleeves of elegant dresses.

Artificial flowers appear upon but few of the fall bonnets, and on none of the hats. However, gold and silver thistles and clusters of wheat are very popular.

White ball dresses for young ladies are decorated with festoons of pink or white roses without foliage, and tied here and there with narrow green velvet ribbons.

The handsomest black velvet costumes have embroidered velvet panels that open over pyramids of cloth of gold on which droop many strands of large cut jet beads.

A new plan for wool dresses is to make the skirt with the double-with material passing around the figure and having only one seam (that in the back) instead of being cut in gored breadths.

Dark colors are preferred for large and small children, with a brightening up in Moliere and finishings. Frequently the entire costume is monotone in sober brown, gray, dark blue or green or deep garnet.

Pear necklaces are finding great favor among young ladies at present. They are not, however, used for the neck, but are twisted about the wrist and form a sort of double bracelet, very becoming to a pretty arm.

REPUBLICANS WIN OHIO.

The Ohio election took place yesterday. Considerale fighting and some bloodshed occurred in the larger cities. The canvass in that state has been the most thorough by both parties ever recorded in history. Much uncertainty has been manifested as to the result, so that the majority which is from 15,000 to 20,000 is a surprise to many.

West Virginia also held her election yesterday and is claimed at least 8,000 Democratic. Republicans had faint hopes of carrying this State.

BUTLER'S tour in New York State will begin to-day.

THE Egyptian government has officially prohibited the sale of slaves.

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND will not leave New York State during the campaign.

HON. THEODORE ROSEVELT has returned from Dakota and will at once take the stump for Blaine.

CATONIA, Italy, has been visited by another cyclone. Thirty persons were killed. King Humbert has sent £400 for the relief of the sufferers.

A western paper informs us that the price paid by Republicans for votes in Ohio, was from $10 to $50. Business will be good in that State now.

THE Irish Republican Brotherhood have issued a circular, warning the corporation not to use the names of Fenians in renaming the streets of Dublin.

THE Republican Prohibitionists have received an address signed by many prominent Republicans urging the withdrawal of St. John and the support of Blaine.

CANDIDATE St. John writes in answer to demands for his retirement, declining to accede to them. He purposes to keep in the field, regardless of what changes may result.

IT is rumored that President Arthur will wed the daughter of Secretary Frelinghuysen, in January, thus giving the fair lady an opportunity of making the White House her home for a brief time.

GEORGE O. JONES, late Chairman of the Greenback State Committee, publishes an address in which he denounces Butler as a fraud and demagogue, who is trying to break up the Greenback organization.

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND'S vote in 1882 was 535,318. Gen. Hancock's vote in this State in 1880 was 534,511. Garfield's vote in this State was 555,544. The scattering vote was 13,890. What will the vote be this year is the question.

UNDOUBTEDLY the largest political demonstration of the campaign, will be held in Brooklyn to-morrow evening. The Democrats of that city will entertain Mr. Cleveland. Extensive preparations have been made, and a big time is anticipated.

AT the State election in Georgia last Wednesday, McDaniel, Democratic candidate for Governor, was elected by a vote of 80,000 as against 107,253 for Alexander H. Stephens in 1882. The Republicans elected but one or two of their candidates for the Legislature throughout the entire State. The Prohibitionists gained a victory in one county.

EX-ASSEMBLYMAN DAVID HEALY, chief clerk of the bureau of labor statistics, at Albany, has been removed from office by the commissioner. Healey presided at a Butler meeting, he being previously warned that if he did so he would be turned out of office. The affair happening so near election, has stirred up hard feelings, and Republican papers have boldly asserted that Cleveland was the main actor in the affair.

AN explosion of dynamite occurred Saturday, at the parliament building in Quebec. The building was badly shaken, and one man was injured. A box, which is supposed to have contained dynamite and an infernal machine, was noticed by workmen lying beside the building before the explosion, but as it was supposed to belong to the plumbers no attention was paid to it. It is thought a portion of the building will have to be rebuilt.

THE New York Sun, on Monday, in speaking editorially on effects of the State elections says: The State elections, however, important as they are, will not be admitted as decisive by either party. The red-hot contest will at once be transferred to New York, and from now until the fourth of November this State will be the theatre of the deepest political excitement, and the most tremendous labors on the part of innumerable politicians, orators, and manipulators.

More About the Tariff.

To the Editor of THE FULTON TIMES.

Sir:—Your correspondent who signs himself "K" has written a letter so full of misstatements on the subject of Free Trade, that I am sure you will pardon me if I attempt briefly to discuss this matter, and present the other side of the question to your readers. I shall take up the arguments presented by K, one by one and endeavor to refute them, and then shall try to show how and why Protection is the true policy which this country ought to adopt.

The first argument presented by K is that it is one of the principles of political economy that every country ought to produce those commodities for which it is best adapted. He illustrates this by an example. Suppose, says K, that in England iron can be produced at $5.00 a ton and wheat at $1.00 per bushel, whilst in America iron costs $6 per ton to produce, and wheat 80 cts. per bushel. Throw open the ports of both countries, and the result will be that America will devote more of her energies to wheat growing, and England to iron producing, and thereby a very great saving in the economy of labor would result. Now on the face of it this might appear a very plausible argument, but let us examine a little more closely into it before we decide upon the matter. Suppose we in this country did throw open our ports, and allow the English iron-masters to pour their wares upon us; would the result be that we should be able to send more of our wheat to England? Not a bit of it. England's ports are already open for our wheat. She is taking as much of it now as she would if we established free trade here. In this country the result would be one prejudicial to a large class of productive laborers, the iron workers. They would be thrown out of employment, and either become a burden upon the public, or be driven to some other employment. "Send them to wheat growing," says K. Then what would be the result? We should see some of the former customers of our wheat growers become their direct competitors. We should see competition lower the wages of the agriculturalists until they had reached the standard with which their cousins across the Atlantic are contented; and the American laborer, who now with reason boasts that he occupies a higher position than his European competitor, would of necessity be reduced to the same degrading level. In England, on the contrary, the result would be highly beneficial. In the first place employment would be found there for her iron-workers, who would reap the benefit of an enlarged market for their productions; and in the second place they would profit by a reduction in the price of wheat which the increased competition in this country would tend to bring about. The fact is, Mr. Editor, your correspondent "K," whoever he may be (and I suspect from the tone of his arguments that his inspiration must come from an an English source) makes the very common mistake of considering this question of Free Trade upon an abstract economic principle, and not from a concrete and practical point of view. Even if we grant his premises that England ought to be the manufacturing centre of the world, whilst America should be the home of agriculture, (though I shall endeavor later to show that this view of the case is inadmissable) granting all this, I say, it does not necessarily follow that we in America should be guided by the theoretically true principles of economic science in order that England may thereby reap a golden harvest. In this practical world the old motto "chacun pour soi" every man for himself—ought to be kept in view; and if we as a nation see that we can draw particular profits to ourselves by a judicious system of protection, why then let us do so, even though we violate all the systems of political economy that have been invented by theorists since the days of Adam Smith.

The next argument which K brings forward is that this country is pre-eminently the home of agriculture, and that therefore the "wages standard is the wages paid in agricultural pursuits." That is to say that we ought to give up all hopes of rising to eminence as a manufacturing nation, and devote all our energies to tilling the soil. By what process of reasoning K can have brought himself to believe this I cannot at all discover. It is true of course that we produce to-day food for a large portion of the population of the globe. But are we not also just as well supplied with manufacturing resources as any other country on the globe—nay far better? We have unlimited supplies of coal and iron; we have rivers which can furnish an incalculable amount of power to turn the wheels of our factories. Here is the natural home of cotton; our rolling pastures and boundless prairies afford sustenance to countless flocks of sheep, whose fleeces can compare favorably with those grown in any other part of the world, In the face of all these facts why are we to look upon ourselves merely as an agricultural nation, and to gauge our standard of wages by the wages of agricultural laborers? It is true of course that a very large portion of our population is to-day engaged in agriculture. But has not this been the case in the history of every nation? It is in the natural course of things that the first inhabitants of a country betake themselves to agriculture and eke out a living by tilling the soil. But with the increase of wealth comes the necessity of establishing manufactures. The manufacturers consume the food which the agriculturists provide, and in turn supply them with articles which add to their comfort, and thus a self-supporting community is established. The agriculturists finds a home market for his products, whilst the manufacturer developes the resources of the country, and is a producer of wealth which would by no other means be brought out.

To assert, as K does, that the price paid for our agricultural products is in any way affected by the tariff, is to give expression to a fallacy of the most egregious kind. As I have endeavored to show above, the effects of a removal of the tariff would be to drive a number of laborers now engaged in manufactures into agricultural pursuits. This would work two ways, both against the agriculturists. In the first place it would take away from the agriculturists a [illegible]

The remainder of K's article, in which he deals with historical facts and figures to show how Free Trade has benefited England, and then endeavors to draw the conclusion that Free Trade ought consequently to benefit America, is misleading in the highest degree. He does not go far enough back in history to draw a fair conclusion, but starting from the point at which Free Trade was established in England, he points out that the country has grown and flourished since that time, and hence argues that these happy results are due to Free Trade. But, Mr. Editor, please just look at the facts. The manufactures of England were not established under a sytem of protection. Not only, were very heavy duties imposed upon articles imported from abroad, amounting in most cases to a total prohibition, but it was made an offense punishable by the severest penalties to export English wool, iron and other raw materials. A search through the statute books of England reveals the fact that a very large number of Acts of Parliament were passed, tending to encourage English manufacturers at the expense of foreign rivals. What was the result of this judicious system of protection? It was that England rose to a pre-eminence among manufacturing nations which she still holds. Under this system she developed the wonderful results which wrought such changes in methods of working as we in the latter half of the nineteenth century can hardly realize. She invented the steam engine, the spinning frame, the power loom and other thing which have completely revolutionized the civilization of the world. She naturally prospered under this state of things, until at the period to which K refers, the year 1850, she stood so pre-eminent in manufactures above all the nations of the world, that she had nothing to fear from any competition, from abroad. There came a depression in trade, and such depressions are liable at all times to occur. The population had increased so that the poorer classes, being thrown out of work, had not the means to buy food. Free Trade was inaugurated, the corn laws were passed, and the price of a loaf of bread was reduced so that the poorer people were enabled to live at a cheaper rate than before. It was a matter of necessity which brought about this state of things; the country could not itself produce food enough to supply the population, and the only way to relieve the starving people was to throw open her ports and admit free of duty the food which could be produced in plenty abroad.

Now what has been the effect of free trade in England since the year 1840. England still holds her pre-eminence in manufactures, but by very much smaller lead than formerly. Some branches of her free trade are being gradually wrested away from her. The silk industry which gave life formerly to the towns of Coventry and Macclesfield is almost ruined by competition with France; the iron trade of Darlington, Sheffield and Birmingham have been seriously affected by competition with Belgium: the cotton industries of Lancashire are languishing whilst American cottons can be seen on sale in almost every large town, and in many other instances than those mentioned the country is suffering from the effects of foreign competition. A fact very significant of the popular feeling there at present is that a strong sentiment is again growing up in favor of protection, disguised, however, under the name of Reciprocity.

I think I have said enough, Mr. Editor, to show that the conclusions which "K" draws in his article are utterly untrue—that instead of England having grown and flourished under Free Trade, the reverse has been the case, and that the undoubted manufacturing supremacy to which she has risen under a system of protection is now in a fair way to be overthrown by the disastrous policy of Free Trade.

Protection, Mr. Editor, is the true policy of this country both for farm laborers and for the manufacturing population. Under a tariff system our laboring population have advanced to a condition such as no other country in the world can point to among its laboring classes—and it is more especially the laboring classes who are benefitted by the tariff. Free Traders are constantly asserting that the protective tariff works for the benefit of the capitalists alone; they say that the people at large are paying more for the articles which they consume in order that a few capitalists may reap the benefit. But this is a grand mistake. As I have endeavored to show above, the withdrawal of the tariff must be followed by a lowering of the standard of wages all round. To compete with foreign manufactures the home manufactures must be obliged to reduce the wages paid to the operatives to the standard paid in Europe, or else they would have to close the doors of their factories. This, as before shown, would lower the wages of the farmer as well as the factory hand. "Well then," say the Free Traders, "admitting that wages are reduced, the price of all commodities will be reduced also, and the laborer is just where he was before." But just reflect a few minutes, Mr. Free Trader, and I think you will admit that this is by no means the case. There are certain commodities of which the price would not be reduced by the removal of the tariff and these things are more especially the necessaries of life. Bread, beef, common working clothes and a thousand other things which enter into the daily needs of the working population would cost just as much as they ever did, because in such things there could be no fear of foreign competition. Some articles could be cheapened, but the proportion of wages which could be used in the purchase of such things would be much smaller than it was before. To illustrate by an example let us suppose that the average weekly wages of the American workingman is $7.50. Of this sum let us suppose that he spends weekly $4 in purchasing the necessaries of life, leaving $3.50 to spend in what we may term the luxuries. Now if the tariff be done away with his weekly wages would have reduced to $5 per week, which is a fair estimate of the weekly wages paid in Europe, $4 of this sum would still have to be spent in necessaries, leaving a balance of only $1 [illegible] protective policy. It is largely owing to protection that the people of our country are more intelligent and progressive than any other people in the world, and unless we would see a very different state of things, I maintain that it is our duty as a nation to see that the protective policy is maintained in the future.

CHEESE MARKETS.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, Oct. 13.—CHEESE.—More cheese was sold on the forenoon market than usual, and owing to strife of buyers for this small class of cheese for local markets, prices ran well up, several lots bringing 12¼c and one 12½c. This gave factorymen who sell in the afternoon the idea that prices were to be again advanced one-half cent, and they were further led to think so by the favorable reports of last week's market in New York. But buyers stood back and firmly resisted all pressure to force the market above 12c. Even had prices gone to 12¼c., it is doubtful if much more cheese would have been sold. Many factories held, and said they would not sell at a less figure than 12½c. Sales of factory cheese are about 2,000 less than they were last Monday. It will be noticed by the list of sales that a larger proportion of cheese brought the top price than usual. This shows a marked uniformity in quality, though in some cases probably the difference that really existed was not taken count of. The following are the transactions:

Lots	Boxes	Price
2	73	11
22	1,252	11¾
73	5,147	12
1	100	12¼
1	90	p. t.
6	350	Com
105	7,012
Farm Dairy	1,420
Total	8,432

FARM DAIRIES.—1,420 boxes farm cheese sold at 11 to 12½c; the most common prices were 11¾ and 12c: four or five lots brought 12¼c., and the Burt Grove factory sold at 12½c.

BUTTER.—There were sales of 110 packages of butter. Farm dairy sold at 24 to 26c., quite, all at 25c. Fifteen packages of above amount were creamery butter, which brought 27c.

The Utica Markets.

UTICA, Oct. 13.—Factorymen anticipated a higher market to-day, New York being ¾c more than it was a week ago. But when they arrived at the board they found it very dull, the talk of buyers being that prices ought not to exceed those of last week. There was some disposition to hold back, and a few salesmen did so, but the majority let their cheese go forward, and accepted what they could get. The difficulty with September cheese is, that that the skimmer has been used to freely this fall, and its effects are seen in the cheese. Factories are certainly losing, not only in reputation, but in profits, by allowing this practice to go on. Utica cheese used to be regarded as genuine full milk goods, but they are fast losing that good name. It is a great mistake, as it can be easily demonstrated that there is no money made by such skimming, while a good deal of extra labor is incurred. You can't eat your cake and have it too.

Transactions of the day are as follows: Five lots, 400 boxes, at 7½c; 53 lots, 4,375 boxes, at 11⅝c; 2 lots, 300 boxes, at 11¾c; 6 lots, 584 boxes, at 11⅞c; 9 lots, 1,156 boxes, at 12c; 4 lots, 262 boxes at 12⅛c; 1 lot of 115 boxes, at 12¼c; and 1 lot of 250, at private terms. Sales, 7,392 boxes; commissions, 1,010; total, 8,402 boxes. Ruling price 11⅝c. Transactions of corresponding day last year 8,543 boxes, ruling price 11c; year before 7,623 boxes, ruling price 12c.

BUTTER.—Ten tubs of butter were sold at 30c, and 30 at 29c. The former were for retail trade in the city, and the butter was creamery.

AT FULTON.

Twenty factories were represented with 1,500 boxes in market, Monday evening, of which 500 sold for 11⅝ cents. The balance are holding for 12 cents.

The State Board of Equalization has fixed the amount of real and personal property in Oswego county at $19,188,-000.

The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the fine and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place or business on the corner of Main and Union Streets.
SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 22, 1884.
Dr David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:
DEAR SIR. For ten years I have been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except those who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this disease sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.
Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.
Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others. Yours, etc., LYMAN CRAWFORD.

SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Cold Lead by the Quantity.—Citizens Feeling Uncomfortable—No One Injured.

This village was thrown into considerable excitement, Monday evening, over a shooting affray which occurred on First streeti in front of Morrow's grocery store. The facts are as follows: As Dr. Irving, proprietor of the Indian Medicine Show was passing the barber shop of Thomas Cavanaugh, in the Lewis House block, Cavanaugh kicked a small dog belonging to the doctor. At this Irving told Cavanaugh the dog belonged to him, and requested him not to repeat the act. But Cavanaugh, it seems, was not so disposed, and again abused the dog. Hard words were then indulged in. Finally, the doctor struck him in the face. This happened just before supper. Cavanaugh, together with some friends, waited in front of the hotel for the doctor's coming after supper, when he struck him a hard blow in the ear, with a stone, which knocked the doctor "silly" for a moment. Not knowing how matters stood for his safety, he immediately pulled out a revolver, and began firing at his assilants, who took to their heels down the street, Cavanaugh turning into Emerick & Morrow's grocery. Bullets were whizzing through the air at intervals of less than one hour apart, two of them following Cavanaugh and lodging in a cheese. The faces of the clerk's after the noise and smoke had died away, plainly told that they did not heartily enjoy celebrations of that sort. Soon after the shooting, officer Murphy arrested Irving and Patrick Cavanaugh, a brother of Thomas, and they were taken before Justice Arvin Rice, who allowed them to go until morning, when Irving went before Police Justice Van Wagenen, and was discharged, as no one appeared against him. The affair has caused considerable comment, and much sympathy is expressed for Irving, who seems to be a peaceable man. It is probable that nothing further will be done in the matter.

An Interesting Case.

The action brought by Dr. Daniel Pardee, of this village, against James D. Taylor, as treasurer of the New York Central Sleeping Car Company, which came up in the circuit court, before Judge Vann, last Friday, proves to be a very interesting case. The Standard's Fulton correspondent has obtained some facts from the doctor, which we publish:

The action is brought to recover the sum of $80, of which he was robbed on the night of February 6th, 1883, while occupying a sleeper between Syracuse and Albany. The defense was made that the sleeping car ticket bore a printed statement in contract form, absolving the company from any liability for personal property, and that the purchase and use of the ticket made the person purchasing and using it a party to the contract. It was shown that Dr. Pardee, who occupied the car "Lockport" when the money was taken, placed his vest, containing a case of surgical instruments, his gold watch and $115 in the hands of the porter for safe keeping; that the property was afterward returned by the conductor, who said the porter had no place in which he could safely keep the property, and that out of the $115 eighty dollars were missing when the doctor awoke in the morning. He does not know whether the money was abstracted while out of his possession, or after it was placed with the vest beneath the pillow. Judge Vann based his decision, granting a non-suit to the company, on the ground that the peculiar construction of sleeping cars was such that the company running them could not be fairly placed on the same footing with the innkeepers, where sleeping rooms could be locked against any intrusion. G. S. Piper, of this village, appeared for Mr. Pardee, and P. W. Cullinan for the company.

It has been decided in the courts that if a dissolved firm neglects to give notice through the newspapers of a dissolution of partnership, he is equally liable with his late partner for all debts contracted after dissolution. This is something worth remembering.

Farmers, if a travelling gentleman asks you to sign a petition asking for a reduction in general taxes, look with suspicion upon him. You may find the "petition" coming back to you in the shape of a promissory note. This dodge is now being played.

Dr. Samuel N. Miller has returned from a somewhat extended season of hunting and fishing in Canada. On his arrival the doctor learned that he had been charged with malpractice and voluntarily gave bail for his appearance at court. The doctor's many patients welcome him.

An exchange remarks that this is to be an extraordinary severe winter, if there is any virtue in the Indian hornet sign. All the nests we have found this year in the woods are built on the ground. When they are suspended from trees, and high up, it is a sign for a mild winter. Some old prognosticators say that they have never known this sign to fail.

The Palladium's Fulton correspondent says: At the Indian show last Saturday evening a handsome photograph album was offered as a prize for the handsomest young lady in the house, and a bottle of Indian sagwa (good medicine) for the homliest man. The first was taken, and deservedly too, by Miss Lizzie Somers, the 17 year old daughter of Mr. Thomas Somers, of Oneida street. The latter by Mr. William Pangburn.

The Stratton—Seymour Standard Theatre Company appeared at the Opera House on Monday and Thesday evenings of this week, first presenting "A Celebrated Case" and last evening appearing in "West and East Lynn." They were greeted with rather small houses. The company gave good satisfaction. Together with the skating rink craze and political excitement shows in this town will not fare sumptuously at present.

A Fine Outlook.

Oswego Falls, as every one knows has grown rapidly within the past two years. The present outlook is indeed very favorable for the continuation of its growth and its prosperity. There are many excellent opportunities for new business enterprises which are very beneficial in the upbuilding of the town. A correspondent of the Palladium writes the following, which if true, goes to show that moneyed men are awake to the opportunities for the enrichment of their pockets and for the advancement of the community:

"There are circumstances and influences at work which we are inclined to believe will, before another year bring about the erection of a large brick block on the north side of Broadway. There are business men of large capital who stand ready to occupy such a block for a large merchandise business. The upper floor will readily rent to parties who would desire to open law offices, dental rooms, insurance agencies, etc. The time is not far distant when the north side of Broadway will be as important a part of Oswego Falls as the south side."

A Bad Fire.

The alarm of fire was sounded about 4 o'clock last Thursday afternoon. The Fire Department was somewhat delayed in getting a start, as there was no team handy to hitch to the steamer, but they finally secured a cart horse. About opposite the "Bee Hive" the steamer ran into a buggy, which somewhat demoralized it. The fire proved to be at Hare's cider mill, and before the company reached the place they were informed that the fire was out. The evaporator attached to the cider mill caught fire from the furnace, and before help could be obtained it was burned to the ground. Fortunately, there being water near by, the cider mill was saved. About one ton of dried fruit was destroyed, also a valuable gold watch and chain. Mr. Hare estimates his loss at about $1,500, with no insurance.

Matrimonial.

Dr. G. G. Whitaker of Oswego Falls and Miss Louise Dean of Rodman, Jefferson county, were married at the latter place yesterday morning by Rev. Mr. Emens of Friendly, N. Y. Immediately after the wedding the happy couple took the train for Oswego Falls. A large number of friends and relatives assembled at the doctor's home to tender them a hearty reception upon their arrival on the afternoon train. Tables laden with delicious eatables awaited the coming. After the feast the remainder of the afternoon was spent in social intercourse. They received many elegant presents.

Oswego Odd Fellows Coming.

The Odd Fellows Uniform Patriarche, of Oswego, will visit Fulton next Tuesday afternoon under the auspices of the Fulton Odd Fellows. There will be a grand street parade, headed by a band which will accompany them, and a drill in the Park. A Horse Stolen.

There was stolen from the barn of John Bennett, in the town of Palermo, on the night of Oct. 10th, 1884, a sorrel mare, 4 years old, white stip in forehead, left hind leg white up to joint, and on inner side of right hind leg a strip of white, diamond shape. Twenty-five dollars reward has been offered for recovery.

Eugene Lathrop and family will soon move into the rooms over his store, now occupied by Walter Boomer and wife, who will take rooms in the Lewis House. Mrs. A. T. Loomis will occupy Mr. Lathrop's residence on First street.

Charles Merritt, of this village, was arrested by Officer Ney, upon a charge of vagrancy, last Thursday. He was arraigned before Police Justice Van Wagenen, and sentenced to six months in the Onondaga Penitentiary. He was taken to Syracuse, Friday.

A horse race from Fulton to Phœnix, a distance of ten miles, took place last Friday, between Wallace Summerville of this village, and William Keesler of Hannibal, for a purse of $25. Keesler won, making Phœnix, a distance of ten miles, in 31 minutes, driving a Mexican mustang.

The Norwich Union says: Mrs. H. S. Bullock, of Fulton, Oswego county, has composed and published a new and simplified method of teaching music, which is entitled "Scales and Chords," and receives general commendation from musical people. Mrs. Bullock was a former resident of Norwich, and we are glad to note her success.

As the handsome steam yacht "Ruth" lately purchased in Philadelphia, by Switz Condee, of Oswego, passed through this place last Saturday she was admired by many of our citizens, a number of them boarding her. Mr. Condee will, no doubt, make some improvements in the way of refurnishing her, etc.

Last Friday afternoon, Frank Chubb, a carpenter of this place, while at work on a scaffold in front of Dyer's store, fell to the sidewalk, a distance of twelve feet. He was carried into Rosenbloom's store, and Dr. Lee was summoned. It was ascertained that his ankle was badly sprained, and otherwise seriously bruised, which will confine him to his house for some time.

In the Supreme Court at Oswego, last week, Judge Vann presiding, the case of Dr. Barringer, against William Gifford, for false arrest, was decided in the doctor's favor. Mr. Gifford being found to pay judgment and costs aggregating $75. This decision is of interest to the medical profession—going to show that a physician duly licensed and registered in the county of his residence can legally practice in any county of the State.

Fulton was well represented at the Depew meeting, in the Academy of Music at Oswego, last Wednesday evening. The Fulton Glee Club was in attendance, and furnished some excellent music, and was loudly applauded. The house was packed, and many were unable to obtain admittance. Mr. Depew's speech was free from mudslinging, and was eloquent from beginning to end. An overflow meeting was held in St. James' Hall, and Thomas O'Brien, of Buffalo, delivered an address. Fulton people returned by special.

At The Rink.

The second five mile race between Charles Eggleston of Oswego and Charles W. Clark of Fulton took place at the rink Saturday evening and was witnessed by a large audience. Clark won by about 2 ½ laps. Eggleston made a bad fall on the start. Master-Charles Beard, fancy & Acrobatic skater made his first appearance at the rink last evening. His performance is good. He will appear again to-night.

The C. L. S. C., of Oswego Falls.

The C. L. S. C. of Oswego Falls had an unusual pleasure on the evening of Oct. 8th, at the residence of Mrs. H. Schenck, occasioned by the unexpected presence of Miss Linna Schenck, who is indirectly the founder of their circle. The lady was visiting friends in this place for a few days and is en route for Bulgaria, where she expects soon to enter upon missionary work, being employed as a teacher and sent out by the M. E. board of missions of this country. She is a most enthusiastic Chautauquan and has enjoyed the culture of three entire assemblies at that place, which she says is equal in value to a complete university course. Having been associated with Dr. Vincent at so many round tables and seen him in his own beloved atmosphere of work, in so many varying capacities, she was well prepared to do justice to his indefatigable and unselfish labors for the good of others, and to answer with great pleasure to the multitude of questions which were presented. She is a graduate of the class of '83 and a lady of fine culture, yet she goes to her work accompanied by a full set of new Chautauqua books, and hopes to add many more seals to her diploma. At her western home where she has acted as President of a circle of C. L. S. C. for the last five years, and she now feels that the uplook and uplift has been very profitable not only to herself but to the large class of teachers and students who have been associated with her. She has no sympathy with intellectual misers but loves to strew broad cast the choice helps which it has been in her power to receive. She cherishes the hope that she may be instrumental in forming a C. L. S. C. at her distant home. Those who were present at this meeting will not soon forget her presence, and will lovingly follow her in thought, as she goes out on her long journey, while they most heartily bid her God speed in the great work before her.

Bacons grand opening day on Thursday of next week.

South Hannibal.

South Hannibal, Oct. 13.—The Randalls Coronet Band treated the people of this place to some very fine music. It was their first appearance in their new suits. They are an energetic band and we wish them success.

A district meeting of the Good Templars was held here Friday evening. The Fulton, Oswego Town, Phœnix and Lysander Lodges were well represented.

The prospects are very good for the election of J. S. Ludington of this town the Democratic nominee for school commissioner. If elected he will faithfully perform the duties of his office, and he is well posted in the modern systems of teaching, and very few better posted.

Several Indictments.

During the session of the grand jury last week it considered twenty-one cases, and fourteen indictments. Among them one against Fred Bennett, publishers of the Fulton Patriot, for libel. Some time last winter the Patriot puublished an article denouncing Richard P. Miller, of this village, as a swindler and a thief, for which Miller brought suit for damages. An indictment was also found against John Lasher and G. Wood, of this place, for abduction.

Oswego Falls Democrats.

This evening the Democrats of Oswego Falls will have a grand rally. They will turn out with torches and escort the Fulton club to Oswego Falls headed by a band. An elegant banner thirty feet long with the names of the Democratic candidates will be raised, after which Hon. C. N. Bulger and Dennis Sullivan of Oswego will address the people in Johnston's Hall.

A Leaf Album.

A leaf album is among the newest fancies. To make one only requires the exercise of a little care and patience. First get a slab of plate glass and spread upon it a daub of printers's ink; then get a small roller such as printers use, and roll it over the ink till the glass is equally covered; then lay the leaf —clean and freshly gathered—on the inked glass, and carefully draw the roller over it. Next lift the leaf by the stalk—using considerable tenderness because of the fragility of the subject—and place it between a folded sheet of paper; press and rub gently all over it, being careful not to let it alter its position. Then take the leaf out and you should have a beautiful clean impression of both the front and back. The same effect might be got to a certain extent with lamp-black, oil-color or anything of that kind, but when it is done with printing ink it is not only far more clear and distinct, but permanent. A bit of common plate glass, or a bit of common plate glass, or a bit of marble, or even a china palette, will suffice to put the ink upon—anything, in fact, so so long as it presents a smooth surface, is non-metallic and non-absorbant.

Her Idea of It

"I think," said she, that I'll get one of those new protective tariffs. I can't keep a collar clean a half hour after putting it on."

"Protective tariffs," echoed her sister making a fresh dab at her face with the powder puff. "What are they for?"

"Why, Martha, I'm ashamed. Don't you ever read the papers? Don't you know that the protective tariff is a little invisible oil silk guard to wear on the back of a plait to keep it from soiling the collar? They are a new invention, and the papers now are advising every lady to wear one."

SOMETHING FOR ALL PREACHERS.

Ministers, as a class, are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly." Dr. G. L. Beardsley reiterates the belief of many scientific men that death is usually quite painless, so far as physical sensation is concerned, and he is also of the opinion that mental numbness, or a feeling of sinking into rest, frees the mind of fear.

IT IS FOOLISH

To send for the doctor every time you don't feel just right. My doctor's bill for years was over a hundred dollars a year, which made a pretty big hole in my wages. For the past two years, I only spent ten dollars, with which I bought a dozen bottles of Sulphur Bitters, and health has been in my family since using them.—ROBERT JOHNSON, Machinist.

Baron Alfonse Rothchild, when asked recently why he did not give up business, replied: "It would take me twenty-five years to settle my affairs sufficiently to enable me to withdraw from the firm."

Dr. BOSANKO.

This name has become so familiar with most of the people throughout the United States that it is hardly necessary to state that he is the originator of the great Dr. Bosanko Cough and Lung Syrup, the people's favorite remedy wherever known, for Coughs, Colds, Consumption and all other affections of the Throat and Lungs. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Sold by M. M. Williams. eow

"Do boldly what you do at all." Boldly do we affirm that Kidney-Wort is the great remedy for liver, bowels and kidney diseases. Rheumatism and piles vanish before it. The tonic effect of Kidney-Wort is produced by its cleansing and purifying action on the blood. Where there is a gravelly deposit in the urine, or milky, ropy urine from disordered kidneys, it always cures.

How Watch Cases are Made.

A plate of SOLID GOLD 14 2-10 karats fine is soldered on each side of a plate of hard nickel composition metal, and the three are then passed between polished steel rollers. From this plate the various parts of the cases—backs, centers, bezels, etc. are cut and shaped by dies and formers. The gold is thick enough to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving, and engine-turning. The composition metal gives it needed strength, stiffness and solidity, while the written guarantee of the manufacturers warranting each case to wear twenty years proves that it contains all the gold that can possibly be needed. This guarantee is given from actual results, as many of these cases have been worn perfectly smooth by years of use without wearing through the gold.

DUBUQUE, IA., Dec. 14, 1880.
I have used one of your James Boss' Gold Watch Cases for seventeen years. I bought it second-hand and know of its having been used before I got it, but do not know how long. It looks good for ten years longer. Did not suspect it was a filled case until so informed by a jeweler a short time since. I most cheerfully recommend your cases to be all they are represented to be, and more.

RELIGIOUS READING.

The Pall Mall Gazettee says that profane swearing has so increased in Spain as to cause alarm at the corruption of language which is taking place.

The Unitarians lately assembled in Saratoga claim only a very moderate, if any, gain in the number of persons belonging to their church, but they say that the effect of their doctrine and spirit is rapidly spreading.

A commercial article in the Independent says that "there are two American principles, both of which are violated by the tax exemption of ecclesiastical property. One is that taxes should be uniform and the other is that religion should be left to stand upon its own merit, and live exclusively by the voluntary support of its friends."

Evangelist D. L. Moody will not settle down to work in any one place until after the elections, but will meanwhile try the experiment of holding a series of meetings at various towns in western Massachusetts. After the November election he will visit Cincinnati and Richmond, Va., and will remain at one of these places thro' the winter.

The Chicago Interior not only has no faith in the faith cure, but is quite aggressively against it. It says: "The 'faith cure' is just now attracting large numbers who are naturally feeble in mind or are on the border of insanity. In one of their circles, in a Chicago suburban church, a sister related her experience, as having prayed for the cure of a sick cat, and announced that the Lord had answered her prayer. This comes very near insanity, if it be not idiocy. No man can be responsible for the vagaries of half demented people, but it reflects dishonor and disrespect upon the church where such religious follies are encouraged."

The Examiner says: "No believer can read the New Testament and imagine it any part of the original plan of the church that it should be split up into an almost innumerable body of opposing sects. The idea of a Holy Catholic Church, tho' it has no present realization, is neither narrow nor unscriptural. Followers of Christ were to be one—one in doctrine, one in practice, one in fellowship. There are many Christians who hold that the existence of sects or denominations is a blessing to the world. We can not so believe. It is an evil that followers of Christ should spend more time and effort in strife among themselves in costly rivalry than in the conversion of the world."

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

Tobacco is a universal insecticide.

The peacock is a great enemy of the potato bug.

The excrement of stock fed on clover is particularly rich in fertilizing properties.

Barrenness in eggs is more frequently caused by a lack of green food than anything else.

Good farmers do not think nowadays of sowing less than six quarts of clover seed to the acre.

The Wordon grapes is said to be as good as the Concord, and to ripen even earlier than the Hartford.

Mr. Vaughan, an American, bought the best bull at Lord Wilton's sale of polled cattl, paying $19,950 for it.

"Timothy" grass took its name from Timothy Haneon, of Maryland, who introduced it in this country from England.

If you have a field to rocky to be cultivated, set out an apple orchard, and in a few years you will have a handsome income from it.

Ten acres of red clover is sufficient pasture for at least fifty hogs, and is superior for that purpose to any other kind of grass except alfalfa.

Young chicks should be fed frequently. Their crops are so small that they can not consume enough food at a single feeding to last them for several hours.

Proper care in planting, and the too common practice of burying seeds, is just the difference between success and failure in their germination and growth.

The way to get the heaviest yields of potatoes from a small acreage is to plant in drills, placing the sets 1 to 1½ feet apart in rows from 2½ to 3 feet apart, according to variety.

Bran is a favorite food with dairymen. In two years of accurate trials its substitution for cornmeal was attended with a loss of from 17 to 20 per cent, in butter product, as well as a loss in quality.

The outside leaves of cabbage are greedily eaten by cows; but with, however, a bad effect on the milk, unless care is taken to feed just after milking. Given thus, the bad flavor goes off before the cow is milked again.

It sometimes happens that the grass runs out when it is not convenient and not possible to replow. Harrowing just before fall rains come, and sowing a mixture of timothy and other grasses, will greatly increase the crop on such fields another season.

Salt in their food when cooked, for poultry, is a very proper seasoning, but salt given in its raw state is deleterious, if much of it is eaten by fowls. We do not recommend its use in any form save mixed with their mash of scalded meal and boiled vegetables.

If stock is pastured it is better to have the land so used divided into two, or better still, into three or four compartments. When they are allowed to run over all they keep all eaten down closely, but by allowing successive portions to get a fresh start they do less walking, waste and destroy less, and a much greater amount of food is produced.

Too Good a Report.

Insurance Agent—"It's all right. The doctor says you are the best risk he ever examined."

Citizen—"The best risk?

"Yes; soundest constitution and perfect health, you know."

"Did he say that?"

"Yes, indeed. No trouble about your case. He said there was nothing to prevent you from living a hundred years."

"You don't mean it?"

"Honest truth. Come right around to my office and I'll fix up the papers at once."

"No, thank you; it won't pay. I'm too healthy."—[Phil. Call.

Let me kiss you for your sister;
 You're a dainty little elf.
If I had not wooed and missed her,
 I would kiss you for yourself.
So this proffered osculation
Comes from a combination
Of absent admiration,
 And a love laid on the shelf.

To be sure you're rather youthful
 All this to appreciate,
You're ridiculously truthful—
 Tender innocence of eight.
One unlucky exclamation,
Quite beyond all expectation,
Brought to light a situation,
 Which decided there my fate.

Those dark eyes would tempt a Titian,
 While the fangled curls above.
You're a miniature edition
 Of the girl I used to love:
But you have not reached the station,
Where your normal occupation
Is a desperate flirtation
 With some poor, deluded cove.

You are pretty—and you know it
 With those eyes of dusky hue.
Probably you will outgrow it:
 Pretty children often do.
Now you know the situation
That I hold to your relation,
You must not express negation
 If I crave a kiss from you.

Let me kiss you for your sister;
 You're a dainty little elf.
It is long since I have kissed her;
 You do very well yourself
Wild and reckless dissipation
Cured my blind infatuation,
Now I love a maid of station,
 And abundant store of pelf

THE BLUE CHAMBER.

A small party of ladies and gentlemen engaged in conversation were sitting after dinner in the spacious grounds of an ancient manor.

The door of the mansion stood wide open. The evening breeze whispered and rustled through the branches of the huge lindens, the shadows grew longer and longer, ink-black beneath the leafy roof of boughs, lighter on the patches of turf.

It was a mild summer evening, still, yet full of strange, mysterious sounds; the soft breeze floated into the doors, bearing with it the heavy fragrance of the flowers. In the gathering dusk the members of the groups could scarcely see each other.

Conversation languished, passing from subject to subject; no one seemed inclined to enter upon a lengthy discussion.

Suddenly one of the party began to relate an anecdote of a ghost he had seen on an evening like this. The plan was successful. Several tales followed; but the young daughter of the house, Anna, continued to ask for more. It was so amusing to hear these marvellous stories, imagine the white and black spectres moving noiselessly in dense shadow or dazzling moonlight, feel a strange horror, chill her blood, and then lean against her mother, finding safety in her embrace. She could not endure Candidate Hoist's way of taking these stories; his scornful comments tore ugly rents in the dreamy veil in which she wrapped herself.

He was a medical student, and had witnessed many similar things in the hospital. It was owing to sickness acting upon different individuals. Either the patient when his imagination was excited, mistook a towel, on which the moon was shining, for a phantom, and the shrieking of the wind in old houses for ghostly cries and the clank of chains, or the whole affair was pure hallucination. A person in a healthy normal condition never saw ghosts.

The whole party opposed his view.—There was surely some truth at the bottom of all these tales. There were a thousand things which could not be explained by natural causes.

Anna was warmly seconded by Hoist's younger brother, Victor, who had arrived at the house with him that morning; though he was influenced more by courtesy to the pretty young girl than because he really felt any fear of ghosts. He could not bear to have his brother appear to place himself in such contemptuous opposition to a pair of such beautiful bright eyes, so he fought a stout battle against his own convictions.

"The history of such things," said the candidate, "is contrary to sound sense and reason. They are miserable relics of the darkness of the Middle Ages, which can only check progress. It would be an utterly idiotic proceeding for dead folks to walk abroad and terrify the living. Tradition carries such tales from generation to generation, and if not subjected to severe scientific criticism, they retain their vitality and are believed. It is the same kind of superstition as that which makes simple folk afraid to sit thirteen at table. In nine cases out of ten nothing happens, and there isn't even one person who thinks of the matter. In the tenth, perhaps, one of the company dies, which is certainly in accordance with the course of nature. Instantly it is said: 'You remember; you remember, we sat thirteen at a table that day.' So the superstition obtains nourishment for a long time. No, thank God, the fresh breeze of knowledge will sweep away all such things like dank, unwholesome fogs."

"Yes, we old people must be pardoned," the mistress of the house gently interposed; we don't come so much in contact with the fresh breeze of science as, perhaps we ought. We live, they say, wholly in tradition, and this thrives nowhere so well as in an old manor like this. It is very difficult to release ourselves from the ideas in which we were reared, and which our ancestors believed. I am far from what is called superstitious; I have never been in contact with these strange spirits, yet not for all the world would I sleep in the blue chamber."

"The blue chamber!" cried the whole party in tones of astonishment.

"Yes, we have here, as in so manor houses, a room that is said to be haunted. Many hundred years ago a man was murdered there, and since then ghosts have taken possession of it. The servants talk of strange sounds and sights; none of them like to pass it after dark,"

"I was sitting thinking that I should be delighted to occupy a real haunted chamber," said Hoist, quietly. "It is a sin to have it remain unused forever. Perhaps I can help to dispel this foolish superstition, for I am convinced I shall sleep undisturbed."

At first the mistress of the house would not listen to such a plan, but when the whole party urged and Anna clasped her arms beseechingly around her neck, she at last yielded.

Anna thought the scheme was wonderfully interesting.

"It is really terrible that you dare venture, Candidate Hoist," she said, "but I hope you will look really frightened when you come to breakfast in the morning."

After supper the whole party went to the "blue chamber," which, meantime, had been put in order to receive the guest. Every corner was examined with the utmost care.

The atmosphere was somewhat oppressive, though the windows were now open. The room was seldom ventilated, and the half mouldy air took the liberty of settling in the furniture and curtains. It had evidently always borne the name of the "blue chamber," although the thick carpet was now faded. The furniture was very scanty, but what articles remained were old fashioned. While time had transformed everything else in the ancient manor, making the stiff, carved chairs give way to comfortable armchairs, and the old chimney pieces to the tile stoves, this room seemed to have preserved its former appearance. It was delivered over to the spirits of the past; no one had attempted to drag it into the present. An article which did not contribute least in enabling it to retain its ancient character was the huge, exquisitely carved four-post bedstead, which occupied a large portion of the room. The apartment was the last one in the wing of the manor, looking out upon the grove, but so near the ground that a person, by the display of some little agility, might climb up.

"It is not impossible," said Hoist, after a thorough examination of the chamber, "that the nocturnal noises may have been made by vagabonds who settled themselves here for a comfortable night's rest; Victor, do me the favor to get my pistol; they are in my traveling satchel, but don't meddle with the triggers, they are loaded.

Victor went away with a light, and soon after brought the pistols to his brother. The latter primed them freshly, put on new caps and laid them on the table.

"Now, good night, ladies and gentlemen, I wish you all as comfortable a rest as I expect to have myself."

"Good night, wicked Freethinker," said Anna, half inquiringly. "I hope you will have different opinions in the morning."

As they went out Victor whispered to Anna: "I'll answer for it that he shall be thoroughly frightened."

The door was locked and Candidate Hoist remained alone in the blue chamber. The sound of footsteps and voices died away; he listened at the door, but all was still.

Going to the window he stood there a few minutes looking at the grove. The soft night breeze stirred the leaves and branches. Beyond was dense, impenetratable darkness, for there was neither moon nor stars in the sky.

"It's really very rare to be free from Madam Luna," said he, "she is so fond of intruding and playing the spy on sensible folk, spite of drawn curtains. For the rest, this is an uncommonly comfortable room. Probably not one of the whole party will have so good a bed to lie in as my lucky self.

"So a man was murdered here, and for the sake of this legend the room has now stood empty hundreds of years. If one could see a few blood stains or similar horrors—but there's no trace of any thing of the sort. What matchless power superstition has, even in our enlightened days! I shall consider it a good deed to drive it from this comfortable stronghold."

Lighting a cigar, he paced to and fro smoking, then walked around the bed and closed his eyes with a half shudder. "How timidly the young girl, Anna, is pressing her pretty face against the pillow at the thought that any human being dares to sleep in the blue chamber. She won't even venture to put out her night lamp for fear of seeing the frightful white shape that must speedily come up here and destroy me."

While thus soliloquizing he undressed, opened the canopied bed, and resolutely extinguished the lamp. There was no sound in the room; only it seemed as if he could hear a rustling noise like the crickets and a mysterious ticking, as though the famous deathwatch was under the carpet. He lay listening a moment, heard the night wind sigh thro' the trees and the great clock of the manor strike eleven, then he fell asleep.

At the end of an hour he suddenly started up in bed, having heard a sound like the opening of a door. A strange, shuddering sensation ran through his limbs as he stared fixedly into the room and beheld a white form moving slowly toward the bed.

Terror overpowered him, but the next instant he regained his coolness and shouted in a firm voice,—"Who's there?" No answer but the shape remained standing in the middle of the floor.

"Who's there? Answer, or as sure as I live I'll fire," he called again, cocking his pistol.

He was once more the quiet, cold-blooded physician; he had surely heard the creaking of a door; it must be a man, a rascal, a murderer perhaps, but no spectre.

Yet, spite of the pistol's warning snap the figure did not move.

"Who goes there!" he called again.

Still no sound disturbed the silence of the room.

The physician stretched out his arm and fired.

A flash of light illumined the dusky chamber and the report shook the old tapestry. Scarcely had the sound died away when a burst of discordant, jeering, fiendish laughter greeted him, and something hard struck his forehead. It was the bullet.

Seized with terrible dread, he fired the other pistol at the motionless white form; again the frightful laughter echoed through the room and the bullet fell heavily back on his own breast.

With a loud shriek he sank down on the bed.

The form glided noiselessly out of the door.

Early next morning, while Anna was watering her flowers, Victor came up to her.

"Where is your brother?" she asked.

"He isn't up yet, poor fellow. He has had a terrible fright.

"What was it?"

"If you'll promise to keep silence I'll tell the whole story. To revenge myself on him I played ghost, first taking care to draw the bullets from his pistol that he might not use the weapons recklessly.—Wrapped in sheets I visited him and threw the balls back at his head when he fired."

"Nothing could be better!" exclaimed Anna.

"But promise me not to speak of it. Your mother might be vexed, and he himself must not be undeceived."

"Trust me; I'll be mute as the grave."

The physician did not come; breakfast waited in vain. At last some of the gentlemen went to wake him. He lay with his head stretched over the edge of the bed; his mouth was wide open, his eyes were starting from their sockets and his hair was as white as chalk. Life had vanished. His discharged pistols were found by his side. One week after, Victor was taken to the insane asylum.—[American Cultivator.

The Farmer and the Editor.

"Seems to me you don't have nothin' ter do," said the farmer, walking into the sactum of the editor, the other day.

"Well, I have worked on a farm a good deal of my life, and I regard editing a socalled humorous paper as harder work than plowing corn," the editor replied.

"Oh, shucks!" exclaimed the farmer. "If I didn't have nothin' to do but sit around and write a little, an' shear a good deal, I tell ye I'd be havin' a mighty easy time."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said the editor. I'll plow corn a day for you if you'll write two columns to-day for me.

Done," cried the farmer.

"And I'll bet yer ten dollars more ye can't plow as much as ye orter."

"I take you," the editor replied.

"What am I to write about?"

"Oh! anything, so it's funny. Remember, now, Mr. Farmer, you are to do the writing yourself. The matter matter must be strictly original."

"Never mind me, Mr. Editor. But look ye. You have got ter do a good o' corn plowin.' Do it jest like I would."

"All right." The editor went to the farm and set a good hand whom he had hired on the way, at work plowing corn. The farmer wrote a head line which read: "Killin' tater bugs," before the editor was out of hearing.

In the evening the editor came into his sanctum blithe and cheerful. The farmer sat at the desk, vexed and worried into anger.

"How do you feel?" asked the editor.

"Used up. Hardest day's work I ever done, an' two lines ter show fer it." Sure enough, he was but one line beyond the head line. That line read: "Killin' taterbugs is funny."

"Then I've won the wager."

"Yes. But I reckon I've won t'other un."

"No, sir! I have won both. I have plowed several acres of corn, and done it well, and I've written my two columns besides."

"Creation! How'd ye do it?"

"Just like you would. I hired a man to do the plowing, and I sat in the shade; but I wrote while I sat there, and did not sleep as you do. Fork over the twenty?"

The farmer paid twenty dollars for his information, but the lesson was well learned, and as he went out, he said:

"Stranger. I wouldn't be an editor if I could. It looks mighty easy, but by Jerusalem, it ain't near so easy as settin' down an' watchin' the man plow corn. I'm a blasted fool, an' yer kin say it in yer paper, if yer want to."—[Bloomington Through Mail.

Poor German Girls.

The girls in Germany outnumber the boys by several millions. This and the fact that many men are too poor to marry, leaves about 5,000 women who have to remain single. The rich girls get married, but the poor ones stay single and are forced to shame or hard labor. In Munich no young man is permitted to marry until he has proved to the authorities that he is able to support a wife. If children are born and the parents cannot support them, the state holds the city authorities responsible for their maintenance. When an unmarried German woman becomes old and poor she is miserable indeed. She cannot starve, so she carries burdens in the street. Often she is hitched like a horse to a wagon, and does a beast's work. Happy indeed ought a young lady to feel when her good fate has permitted her to be born in America!—[Eli Perkins.

FASHION NOTES.

All shades of brown are in high favor

Murray is a new shade between violet and claret color.

Large tournures are shown in all the French fashion plates.

French ladies favor the English styles of dresses this season.

Ruby velvet trimmings are combined with blue with pleasing effect.

Among novelties for the toilet are stockings edged with lace frills at the top.

The applied velvet motifs are largely imported and sold for autumn dresses.

Plaid wools of red and green, or brown and red, are used for over dresses with red skirts.

Very narrow bracelets in bangle form, or set with precious stones, are approved by dame fashion.

The long pelisse, stylishly made and trimmed is a favorite autumn wrap for the little maidens.

Bonnets made entirely of black lace are popular just now for evening wear among middle aged women.

Tan colored undressed kid gloves will remain in fashion both for the street and for full dress occasions.

The newest buttons for dresses have a hook at the back, and eyes or loops are provided to fasten them with.

Trained dresses will, it is said, be worn more this season than they have since short costumes have been adopted.

Printed delaines in exquisite shades are made up with shot silk and trimmed with cream lace for evening dresses.

Bretelles are seen again and are liked, as they give the appearance of a long slender waist which is now in favor.

Velvet is the febric for full dress toilettes with trains, and will be worn by young women as well as the middle-aged.

Fop chains are considered stylish for ladies' wear, with plain tailor-made suits that have vests with slit pockets.

Short cropped hair laid in loose curls all over the head is still in fashion and is likely to remain so for some time to come.

Babies'afghans of eider or Angora cloth are worked with silk crewels, lined and edged with a contrasting color in satin.

Among the newest handkerchiefs are those made with red and black borders on which are grotesque little imps in colors.

For trimming wool dresses the yak laces come in all colors, both quite plain and enriched by metal threads, gilt, silver or bronze.

Black embroidered laces with scalloped edges and embroidered net to match are the new trimmings for dresses of black silk or satin.

All dark colors are seen in the fall hoisery for children. Some of the newest are blocked in plain tints, also in plaid squares.

For the present white and flannel costumes have become indispensable portions of an autumn wardrobe out-of-town, particularly for boating.

The short chenille-trimmed dolmans, which were so popularly worn last spring, will be fashionable again this fall for both young and elderly ladies.

Alpaca is again in fashion, and the very fine and excellent quality of the new brands will doubtless insure the material against long sustained unpopularity.

Cashmeres in a variety of beautiful dark shades are to be extensively worn this fall. For young girls they will be made up over side plaited silk skirts of the same colors.

Separate drop trimmings of jet or satin representing berries or flowers, are sold by the dozen for the front of a dress skirt and its vest, or on the side of a mantle or cloak.

A very handsome street costume made in Paris has a plum colored velveteen skirt, with scalloped scant flounce laid over a narrow ruffle of the same goods; the polonaise is of gray cashmere with bouffant drapery and Moliere vest.

Don't Strike with the Hand.

Don't strike a child with the hand; a little switch of rattan is better. The reason is a philosophical one. The hand tells a great deal. It gives out the feelings of the heart. How soothing is the mother's hand to the suffering child! How its gentle magnetism calms the disturbed, nervous system as it glides softly and tenderly over the little form. It relieves the aching head, soothes the disturbed spirit, brings ease and comfort as it drives away pain. How often a cordial grasp of the hand gives sympathy to an aching heart.

MR. BLAINE has been speaking to the people of Indiana this week.

THE Japanese Minister was presented to the President, Saturday.

THE Democratic demonstrations in New York and Brooklyn last week which Cleveland attended were grand affairs.

THE average size of families in the United States in 1850 was 5.56. Since then it has gradually decreased to 5.04 in 1880.

THE Bennett-Mackey cable was finally safely landed on Coney Island, Saturday afternoon, amid the cheers of the crowd assembled on the beach.

HANLAN and Beach will row a three and one-quarter mile race on the Paramatta River, Australia, early in January for the championship of the world.

MINISTER to Spain Foster will sail for America shortly with the new Spanish West India commercial treaty which has been signed by the minister of foreign affair. Foster will return to Madrid to negotiate a treaty of commerce on terms which Spain has already accepted.

NEW YORK still remains the turning point in the Presidential contest. In this respect the October elections have not altered the situation. The candidate of the party that captures New Yok will surely enter the White House. The other candidates will have to stay outside.—[New York Sun

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND was assaulted on the street on Monday by a man named Samuel Boone of Elmira who is supposed to be a "crank." Fortunately the Governor was not injured. Boone was arrested. He has annoyed the Governor several times before about a pardon for his brother in law who is in Auburn prison.

EX-SENATOR MATHEW HALE of Albany, a life long Republican declared, through a letter which was used at the great Albany meeting of the Independent Republicans, that he would support Cleveland henceforth. He gave his reasons for denouncing Blaine. He said it was with great reluctance that he left the Republican party.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL O'Brien decides that canal boatmen who live on their boats and make them their actual domicile, can vote where they lay up their boats for the winter. John I Davenport, Chief Federal Supervisor of Elections, holds that married men who have homes elsewhere have not that right. The question is not free from doubt, and the clause of the State Constitution referring to navigators of the inland waters has been interpreted both ways by eminent lawyers.

WE do not, however, expect to see any other than political suicides as a result of our Ohio victory, nor do we fully agree with Mr. Blaine that Ohio settles the result of the election. It will have a large influence upon it. The victory shows that the drift of things is in the right direction. Coming after Vermont and Maine, it furnishes almost irresistible proof that the heart of the country is still true to the Republican party. But what Mr. Conkling once said remains true, that "New York does not follow the lead of any other State." And, as the Express said yesterday, it is New York, and not Ohio, that is the pivotal State. We have not carried New York by Carrying Ohio.—[Buffalo Express, (Rep.)

THE defeat of Frank H. Hurd, the Ohio Democratic candidate for Congress, is a great victory won. Mr. Hurd is a young man of wonderful ability, and was of valuable service to his party. He was a strong advocator of free trade, and therefore, for that reason, if for no other, his defeat is worth rejoicing over. The people of Fulton should feel thankful over such a victory, for in the cutting off of free trade advancements it assures us that our manufacturing interests (for which the prosperity of our village is due,) is safer and more certain of protection. We, as a people, may well feel happy over such good news. It is for you voters, to say, whether we shall have protection and prosperity, or free trade and hard times.

Those that have used it agree that it is by far the best medicine known. Its action is prompt, thorough and lasting. Don't take pills, and other mercurials that poison the system, but by using Kidney-Wort restore the natural action of all the organs.

"No, I never fourt enny."

"What did you do?"

"Broke on er freight train."

"How did you escape? I thought you enlisted."

"Well, I did, but jess before we wuz ter go inter the fust fight Gineral Cook made er speech ter the boys an' woun' up sayin', 'Boys, strike fer yer firesides an' yer homes!'"

"Well?"

"Ad' I struck for home, yet bet, an' stayed thar."—[Georgia Cracker.

Should Prohibitionists Vote for St. John and Daniel?

BY C. W. CUSHING, D. D.

Why not? If real Prohibitionists it is fair to suppose that they are so because they believe that the distinctive features of the Prohibition party constitute the most important issues before the people. It is also fair to suppose that under ordinary circumstances the most direct way to secure prohibition would be by putting men into office who believe in prohibition, and will labor to secure it.

Why then not vote for St. John and Daniel? Because, it is said, "by so doing you will throw away your vote." This must mean one of two things: It must mean that because there is no hope of electing these candidates, therefore the vote is thrown away, or it must mean that by voting for these candidates Prohibitionists will help defeat the Republican party and install the Democrats, which, it is alleged, would be fatal to prohibition.

Thoughtful men will hardly accept the first position, for it would imply that no one would be justified in working for a cause until sure he was in the majority—that all effort would be thrown away, until sure that the preponderance of public opinion was in favor of the proposed measure. Accepting this as true, no reform would ever be undertaken.

Abandoning this, then let us look at the second position. One would suppose that the men and the party papers that are constantly raising the cry that "to defeat the Republican party would be fatal to prohibition" mean to imply that in some sense the Republican party is favorable to prohibition. There are some, calling themselves Prohibitionists, who are frank enough to say that they shall vote the Republican ticket because they believe that there are other issues of more importance than prohibition. That is all right. We honor such for voting with the Republicans, But let them not call themselves prohibitionists. They are Republicans with prohibition proclivities. But to return to the Republican party. Is there any hope that it will in any event avow itself in favor of prohibition? I answer, yes, when it is compelled to do so in order to escape an utter overthrow. And I am not sure that the Democratic party would not do the same. And yet I must be candid and admit that in the northern States, there are many more who believe in prohibition in the Republican party than there are in the Democratic party. I am not unaware, nor reluctant to admit, what the Republicans have done in such States as Vermont, Maine, Iowa and Kansas. But after all this, I think I should be justified in saying that in this country more prohibitory laws have been enacted by Democratic legislatures than by Republican legislatures, and that more prohibitory laws have been repealed by Republican legislatures than by Democratic legislatures. I do not mean by this to imply that there is less to hope from the Republican party than from the Democratic. The statement is made simply to offset the declaration so often repeated, that all the legislation which prohibitionists have secured has been through the Republican party.

But there is another fact which is unfortunate for this Republican party. Whenever they have been forced to accept prohibition, as in the States we have named, the action has never been approved by the national party. They rather, in too many instances the leaders of the party have declared that it was not the Republican idea, and in some instances have attempted to overthrow it, as in Kansas, or have made haste to declare that they did not endorse it, as in Maine recently. The people assuredly have not forgotten how that on the very eve of election day, when the banner State of Maine had been stirred over the question of constitutional amendment, as it was never stirred before, Mr. Blaine was careful to say to the country at large that the leaders of the Republican party—himself at the head—ignored the question of constitutional amendment. Why? Because the convention which had nominated him at Chicago had refused to say that it was even willing to give the people their constitutional right to say what they desired in reference to this matter, and he must be in accord with his party. Besides it was necessary that the powerful liquor organizations of the country which had declared that they would vote for no man who was not favorable to their interests, should be made to understand that the leader of the Republican party would under no circumstances raise his hand against the work in which they were engaged; not even when it was purely a State issue, and in his own State, and even when he had said that he believed in settling the question in the States; and when, moreover, it had been announced to the people before that Mr. Blaine would support the measure; still, in the face of all this, Mr. Blaine and his party were at great pains to announce that he and the leaders of his party did not support the measure. Now, why all this? Why did the Republican party ignore this question of constitutional right at its convention in Chicago? I asked this question to the editor of one of the most influential Republican newspapers in New York State. His answer was: "It would have been suicidal for the party to do otherwise." Why? One hundred thousand Christian women, added to a larger number of temperance men, were pledged to work for the party if it had done it. Why, then, would it have been "suicidal"? Because it would have offended the Liquor Leagues! The truth is, the Republican party believed that the poor, submissive Prohibitionists would not abandon the dear old Republican party, whatever might be done, for they had borne insults patiently heretofore. But the Liquor League would bolt unless a "sop" was thrown them every time. This, doubtless, was what led Mr. Blaine to dodge the vote in his own State, or what was worse, to proclaim from the house to the whole nation what he and the leaders of his party had done

The 44,000 majority for the constitutional amendment—more than twice as great as the majority of the Republican party—shows how the honest yeomanry of Maine estimate such conduct. This action of the Republican party and its leaders, towards Prohibitionists and Liquor Leagues, reminds us of the story of the Arab and his two wives. One of these wives, as the story goes, was a most beautiful, modest, patient and dutiful wife. The other was irascible, imperious, defiant, and very termagant. It was observed, however, that the Arab was very neglectful and even insolent and cruel to the patient and lovable wife, while he lavished all his gifts and attentions upon the termagant. When asked for an explanation, "Oh," he said, "this is the most beautiful and faithful wife I ever knew. No matter how much I neglect or abuse her, she clings to me and serves me devotedly. While this other wife will do nothing unless I pet her and bestow upon her everything I can command. In fact she demands that I shall neglect and abuse my good wife as the only condition which will peacify her." I hardly think it necessary to state the application. But I may say this, that the Republican party will never change its course until it is made to feel that the support of at least 1,000,000 of Prohibitionists depends absolutely upon the condition of the party, upon this question of submitting the matter of constitutional amendment to the vote of the people. When the Prohibitionists of this country can go to a Republican convention and say, gentlemen, we have from one three millions of votes which we can give to your party if you nominate the right men with the right doctrines in your platform, their appeal will not be passed by in silence; and this is our answer, why Prohibitionists should vote for St. John and Daniel. We want the Republican party to feel that the Liquor Leagues of this country are not the only organizations of sufficient importance to command their consideration and respect. And we mean by the help of God that the vote which shall be cast next November shall at least stop the sneering of their leading partisan papers and lead the party to feel that Christian women and temperance men are not to be treated with silent contempt.

But is said, "If the Republican party is defeated you will be responsible for it." Be it so. For one I would rather be responsible for such results, whatever they may be, than to be guilty of stifling my convictions, or of the cowardice which would keep me from doing what I knew to be right. I know the Prohibitionists can make sure the election of Mr. Blaine if they will. But how? By stifling the voice of conscience, stopping the ear of reason, shutting the eyes against the light of truth which points to the path of deliverance and thus emasculated, allowing themselves to be led by the blind, until both together shall fall into the ditch.

But why I ask should Prohibitionists, who vote with their conscience, be held responsible for Republican defeat, if it should come? The Republican party has been faithfully admonished, it has been warned of what Prohibitionists would do; but it has chosen its course deliberately and assumed the responsibility of the risk, and if its course shall involve it in disaster, now, or hereafter, let the censure and the shame fall where they belong—upon those who with open eyes invited and assumed the consequences.

This everlasting whining about the responsibility of Prohibitionists is puerile and unworthy the leaders of a great party! Pray, have not Prohibitionists as good a right to vote their convictions as Republicans have to vote theirs?

But it is said again, this is not a national campaign. So says Mr. Blaine. This is a very artful device of the shrewdest partisan politician of this generation. What is a national question? Is it not one which touches the nation at every point and one over which, because of this, the national government has assumed some sort of control? Why does the national government assume control of the currency and of postal affairs? Obviously because they interest every person in the nation. Does not the liquor traffic touch the interest of every individual, of every State and Territory in this broad domain?

But morn than this. It has been made a national question by the action of the national government. This government has become the guardian and foster father of the liqoor traffic. It stands pledged to exercise all its powers of legislature, judicature and executive, to protect and facilitate the transportation of imported liquors into and through every State and Territory of the Union, even though such State may have prohibited the transportation and traffic in liquors throughout its borders. More than this, it grants tax receipts, authorizing the sale of the liquors specified, and these tax receipts are given to violators of law, even in States where the traffic is prohibited.

Senator Blair, in a 4th of July speech published, in The Independent of July 12h, 1883, has well said: "The State can partially reach the sale and use within their own borders; but the manufacture and distribution are practically beyond their control." "No prohibition of the manufacture and transportation can be effective unless by virtue of the national law, because the manufacture for the world can take place on any single square mile of the continent and and transportation is controlled by national power." And he adds: "What the temperance reform most needs is nationalization." It seems like folly to ask if Mr. Blaine does not know all this? And does he not know, moreover, that the national government has control over all the Territories of the United States, and that these Territories cover well nigh one-half of our domain—that in all these Territories, save it may be the Indian Territory, the government allows and protects the distilling and sale of liquors, which are spreading blight and ruin all through their borders? Does he not know that the national government authorizes and stands as a body-guard over the one thousand or more saloons in the District of Columbia? And is it not true that Congress only can originate a movement for a change of the constitution which will prohibit the importation, manufacture and traffic in intoxicating drinks as beverages? And I ask in all sincerity if these considerations do not compel the admission that this is preeminently a national question? And yet Mr. Blaine and the leaders of the Republican party, fearing the influence of the Prohibition vote, are continually declaring that this question of the liquor traffic is in no sense a national one. In all sincerity I can but feel that this cry is only the trick of wily politicians—that it is all a hollow sham!

I know it is claimed that the tariff and civil service reform are of more consequence now that the prohibition of the liquor traffic. To this I will only say, of the money which will be worse than wasted for intoxicating drinks during the next twelve months could be distributed among the laboring men and manufacturers of this country, it would benefit them vastly more than all the improvement which would come from tariff reform through the triumph of any one party; while the sobriety and good order which would follow would be more than an equivalent for any civil service reform which we are likely to secure. Moreover we shall have the benefits of civil service reform and tariff to some extent, whichever party may be in authority.

There are many other considerations which might be urged why Prohibitionists should vote for St. John and Daniel. But if these are not conclusive it is doubtful whether any number would be. And now, with these facts before us, can any man offer one valid reason why an honest Prohibitionist should vote the Republican ticket? The history of the party, as well as its present attitude, when considered in its relation to prohibition, is certainly that of indifference, not to say hostility. The attitude of its leader, and the principles which he advocates are such as should fill every true Prohibitionist with alarm, and especially when he thinks of such a man becoming his standard bearer. I know he is styled "The Plumed Knight," gallant and brave. But to the devoted, watchful Prohibitionist there is something portentous in all this, which suggests a change of the metaphor to that of a plumed night, which casts its shadow of dark foreboding over every home in the land. Let us then, as Prohibitionists, stand by our brave and honest leader, who defied threats and stood by his convictions, even while his enemies burned his house over his head, and exclaiming with Luther, "Here I stand, I cannot do otherwise; God help me! Amen." Vote for St. John and Daniel.—[Northern Christian Advocate.

COUNTY COMMENTS.

From Our Exchanges.

Quite a large sale of hops has been made in our vicinity the past week, ranging in price from 16 to 18 cents and some very choice lots bringing a little above those figures. This will put a little more money in circulation.—[Oswego County Sun.

The officials of the village of Pulaski are considering a proposition from an outside corporation to furnish the town with a system of water works.

South of Fulton, and in the eastern part of the county, there was a slight fall of snow last Friday night.

The Union cheese factory at Daysville was destroyed by fire recently. Five hundred boxes of cheese were destroyed. Loss about $4,000; insurance, $3,500. The factory was owned by the patrons, and operated by C. A. Davis of Mexico.

"He's got 'em on! He's got 'em on!" triumphantly exclaimed Johnnie Jarphly at the breakfast table. "Got wot on?" asked his mother in surprise. "What ails you, Johnnie? What are you peeking under the table so for? Why don't you set up straight and eat your meat?" "Got what on, sir? what are you talking about?" sternly asked his father. "Why, you got your pants on, and I heard Mr. Smiff say that he thought ma wore 'em."

Hop News.

The Oneida Union says: "The market remains much the same as for the past month, though at times during the past week there have been light spasmodic improvemets, which have somewhat inspired new hopes in holders of stock. Exporters are unable to handle hops to any extent at present rates, and trade is almost entirely confined to the limited demands of home brewers. The chances are that there will be little activity, even among home dealers, until after election. Business of all kinds is much depressed, and men are out of employment to a large extent in almost every branch of manual labor throughout the country. A complete change in the administration of the governmental affairs may inspire new confidence in our people, unlock the wheels of commerce, give us an outlet for our surplus products of all kinds, fan new life into our manufacturing enterprises by giving them the vigorous support of better paid producers, and effect a very desirable change, not only to the tillers of the soil, but to the entire country. A change in fronts would neither add to nor diminish the quantity of hops on hand, but we think it would create much of the needed activity in all branches of trade. Few sales of hops have been effected within the last week by our home dealers, the prices ranging from 20 to 21 cents per pound for prime samples."

CHEESE MARKETS.

The Utica Markets.

UTICA, Oct. 20.—The market could be hardly called active to-day; in fact, there was hardly anything that could be called a market until after 5 o'clock. Buyers were very indifferent, and hardly thought they could pay last week's prices, altho' they finally concluded to do so. Factorymen sold their cheese pretty generally, a few closing out all of their Septembers. As a rule, however, it will take another week to clear up the make of that month. Some disappointment is felt because the late September cheese, which are believed to be the best, are not selling as well as it was expected they would. But if the factories will allow their patrons to skim, they can not complain if their cheese is not equal to that of the unskimmed factories.

Transactions to-day were as follows: Six lots, 600 boxes, at 11½c; 44 lots 4,028 boxes, at 11⅝c; 6 lots, 330 boxes, at 11¾c; 7 lots, 662 boxes, at 11⅞c; 7 lots, 786 boxes, at 12c.; 150 at 12¼c, and 5 lots, 511 boxes, at private terms. Sales, 7,017 boxes; commissions, 904; total, 7,921 boxes. Ruling price, 11⅝c. A year ago, under the spur of an advance of one-half cent, the transactions were 10,839 boxes; ruling price, 11½c. Two years ago they were only 5,694 boxes at a ruling of 12c.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, Oct. 20.—Cheese.—Contrary to expectation, prices are not quite as firm as last week, when the ruling price was 12c. To-day the ruling price is 11¾c., although there was nearly as much sold at 12c. There is little to say as to the market. Buyers claim that only 12c can be paid for the very finest cheese, and that much of the September cheese does not come up to this standard. Quite a number of salesmen who last week refused to sell at less than 12¼c and 12½c., concluded to sell today at 12c. There is no accumulation of stock factories in this section, and salesmen are more than usually anxious to realize as much as possible from the small amounts yet to go forward, Transactions to-day are:

Local Political News.

The Democrats of this town and Volney held a grand rally last Wednesday evening. The Cleveland and Hendricks club of the west side village, about 75 strong, with torches started out about 8 o'clock, marching down First street and over the lower bridge, headed by the Fulton Band. Upon their arrival here they were joined by the Irish American and Cleveland and Hendricks clubs of this place, numbering in all nearly 300. The procession then marched back to Oswego Falls where a Cleveland and Hendricks banner was flung to the breeze across Broadway and Second streets. After three hearty cheers were given for the candidates they marched to Johnston's hall where A. D. Wales of Binghamton and D. Sullivan of Oswego addressed a large audience. James Carrol was elected chairman, and Fred Summerville and Michael Neale's, secretaries. John E. Parker sang one of his original songs which brought down the house. The demonstration is pronounced the largest Democratic rally held here during the campaign.

The same evening the Republicans ratified the news from Ohio. Canons were fired and fire works and colored lights illuminated the heavens. The Blaine and Logan Club nearly 100 strong in uniform, marched through the street headed by the Hannibal Band. After parading about for some time they marched to Nichol's hall. A large crowd had assembled there and E. H. Nichol's esq., called the meeting to order. Brief speeches were made by Slater Laycock, D. D. Metcalf, H. C. Howe and L. A. Stockwell. The glee Club furnished the music. Much enthusiasm was manifested during the evening.

Last Thursday evening Addison Davis of Massachusetts made a political speech in Nichol's hall to a somewhat limited audience of Greenbackers and Butler admirers. At the close of the meeting an effort was made to organize a club.

Skating Rink.

The rink was well filled Saturday evening, the occasion being the appearance of Miss Jennie Houghton. She is a wonderful skater and performed many difficult feats. Miss Hougton is not as graceful a skater as Miss Harvey who commanded the attention of our people a few weeks since.

Prof. Winslow of Boston, the fancy trick and two roller skater will appear at the rink Saturday evening next.

The five mile race of last evening between Messers Annis & Fayette of Oswego was won by Annis.

Oswego Odd Fellows.

The Uniform Patriarchs of Oswego visited this place yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of the Fulton Odd Fellows. They marched from the lower D. L. & W. depot, headed by about thirty Fulton Odd Fellows and the Oswego City Band. After parading about the streets, they marched to the park for drill. They presented a creditable appearance, and executed their movements with skill and precision that showed careful training.

The Seymour Stratten Standard Theatre Company appeared in "The Two Orphans" at the Opera House, last evening, before a good sized audience. This evening they will present "Oliver Twist," Thursday evening, "A Celebrated Case," Friday, "Uncle Tom's Cabin"; and Saturday in "Ticket of Leave Man." The company is one of the best that has visited Fulton in some time, and deserve a liberal patronage, They come highly recommended by the press. Tickets on sale at Watson's Drug Store,

Those who use canned goods should pour out the contents of the cans as soon as they are cut. It is claimed that fifteen or twenty minutes exposure to the air while in the can will give the contents a disagreeable metallic taste.

Giles S. Piper has purchased the old Kenyon residence on the corner of Buffalo and Third streets. Mr. Piper will at once make improvements on the place preparatory to occupying it as a home. The location is one of the pleasantest in town. The property was owned by Mrs. Frank Kenyon Race of Rochester.

"Every girl ought to know how to make good coffee," remarks Rev. Alfred Taylor, of New York. "Bad coffee," he says, "has made many bad men. Bad coffee has ruined many homes. Bad coffee has driven many husbands and fathers and brothers to the drinking dens, where they picked up habits of drunkenness. The girl has a great deal to do with it."

The factory managers have changed the working hours of the employees. Instead of going to work at 6:20 a. m., as heretofore, they now commence their labors at 7 a. m. They are given 40 minutes at noon, and quit work at 6:35 p. m., excepting Saturday, the factory closes at 5 p. m. It has always been the custom to close the mill at 2 o'clock p. m., Saturday's. This change will have a tendency to make things lively for our merchants on Saturday evenings.

Hannibal should feel proud of her band. They are all good-looking fellows, handsomely uniformed, and are conveyed about the country in a band wagon of elegant design. Mr. Dada, their leader, is a talented musician, and a gentleman in every respect. Their instruments are new and costly. The band did themselves credit at the Republican rally at this place, last Wednesday evening, and the many compliments we overheard were not out of place. They rank high as amateurs.

One of the largest Republican meetings of the campaign in Fulton, was that of Monday evening at the Opera House. D. W. Gardner was made chairman, and introduced as the speaker of the evening, Hon. Geo. B. Sloan. of Oswego. Mr. Sloan discussed the political issues of the day in an eloquent manner, and won the good feeling of his hearers. The Blaine and Logan Club attended in uniform, and the Glee Club, under the leadership of our worthy postmaster, discoursed several fine selections. Politics are red hot.

Messrs. Weeks and Redhead, who constitute the Victoria Paper Co., of Fulton, have recently made a large purchase of real estate in this vicinity. They have bought of A. G. House, of Orwell, 1558 acres of timber land lying in that town and in Albion. The papers making the transfer are to be made out by Mr. G. L. Cross at the land-office in this village. The firm named purchase the land in question for the spruce lumber there is upon it, and it is estimated that it will amount to 3,000,000 feet. The lumber will be made up into wood pulp and then manufactured into paper. Messrs. Weeks and Redhead are enterprising and prosperous business men.—[Pulaski Democrat.

Syracuse was alive with people from early day until late last night. Onondaga county Republicans turned out in thousands and the demonstration was the greatest ever held in that city. Financial Troubles.

For several days, says the Standard's Fulton correspondent, there has been a commotion going on in the business firm of Schenck, Sheridan & Co., manufacturers of cider presses. On Saturday it came to a head, when Deputy Sheriff Hulett attached some of the mashinery and presses which were being stored in Foster's store house, near the D. L. & W. freight depot at the lower bridge. E. W. Ross claimed the property as his and forbade its removal. Both parties are certain they can hold it and the lawyers are very busy to-day making and answering papers. It seems that for many years the iron work for these power cider presses has been furnished by E. W. Ross & Co., and that security from time to time has been given on the personal property. One chattel mortgage running to Nelson Fitch, of New York, who is the "Co.," of the firm, was in the sum of $14,000. The mortgage it is said ran out a short time since, and was not renewed by Schenck & Sheridan and they confessed judgment in quite a large sum in favor of other creditors, among them Mr. Schenck's mother, to secure payment of the land the manufactory is built upon. It is said further that the firm within a few months past signed an agreement giving Mr. E. W. Ross full control of all its business, with right to receive and open all the mail addressed to the firm and stipulating that all sales for presses should be credited to E. W. Ross until the sum of $23,000 and interest should be fully paid, in addition to all moneys Ross should further advance in carrying on the business. This instrument. the attorneys for Mr. Ross claim, holds all the property now attached and all that is on and about the premises of Schenck & Sheridan. An effort will be made to adjust the difficulty. No charge is made of an attempt to defraud or refuse to pay all debts. The firm claims to be perfectly good, with never before such large sales as this year.

A Great Meeting.

The Democratic county committee are perfecting arrangements for a great mass meeting to be held in the Armory and Academy of Music in this city on Monday evening next. Thomas A. Kendricks, Governor Dorsheimer, Richard T. Merrick and Gen. Thomas F. Bourke of New York will be present and deliver addresses. Special trains will be run on the R. W. & O. from Rose and Richland and on the D. L. & W, from Fulton. It will be the greatest political meeting ever held in Oswego.—[Oswego Palladium.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

FEARFULLY COMMON.

Kidney Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages.—A Brilliant Recovery.

There is something starting in the rapid increase of Kidney diseases among the American people within a few years past. Many cases peculiar to certain classes tend to produce and aggravate these troubles—as, for example, careless living, overwork, and exposure. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is often congratulated on the exceptional success of his medicine called FAVORITE REMEDY, in arresting and radically curing these most painful and dangerous disorders. Proofs of this, like the following, are constantly brought to his attention and are published by him for the sake of thousands of other sufferers whom he desires to reach and benefit. The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the fine and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place or business on the corner of Main and Union Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR. For ten years I have been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except those who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this drecise sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others.

Characteristics of Smokers.

A gentleman who is a great "fumigator" says that he has philosophized about smokers, with this result: "An even tempered quiet man never goes to an extreme in choosing his cigar. A nervous man wants something strong and furious; a mild man something that smokes, and nothing more. There is a great deal in the way men handle their cigar. If a man smokes his cigar only enough to keep it lighted, and relishes taking it from his mouth to cast a look at the blue curl of smoke in the air, set him down as an easy-going man. He has keen perceptions and delicate sensibilities. He will not create trouble, but is apt to see it out when once begun. Beware of the man who never releases the grip of his cigar, and is indifferent whether it burns or not. He is cool, calculating and exacting. He is seldom energetic physically. but lives easily off those who perform the labor. The man that smokes a bit, rests a bit and fumbles the cigar more or less, is easily affected by circumstances. If the cigar goes out frequently the man has a whole-souled disposition, is a devil-may-care sort of a fellow with a lively brain and a glib tongue and generally a fine fund of anecdotes. To hold half of the cigar in the mouth and smoke indifferently is a lazy man's habit. They are generally of little force, and their characters are not of the highest strata. A nervous man, who fumbles his cigar a great deal, is a sort of popinjay among men. Holding the cigar constantly between the teeth, chewing it occasionally, and not caring if it is lighted at all, are characteristics of men who have the tenacity of bull dogs. They never forget anything or let go their holds. The fop stands his cigar on end, and an experienced smoker points it straight ahead, or almost at right angles with his course. Such has been my observations with regard to smokers."

Genius, Talent, Industry.

"Talent" is a quality which enables its possessor to acquire knowledge by learning from others and by unassisted study. Talent is an elaborite engine, skillfully devised to many wheels and to perform divers works, but wanting the motive power.

"Genius" on the other hand, is characterized by an indpendence of instruction; it takes its own course, and originates new ideas and inventions never thought of before. It may, of course, enlarge its sphere of knowledge by reading, by observation, and by experiment; but it is by no means characteristic of genius to be apt to be taught; on the contrary, embryo geniuses are often dull fellows at school and idle to boot. It rather dislikes to follow in the track of others, and rises superior to obstacles of circumstances and deficiences of education. Genius may safely be left to hew a path for itself.

Can industry then supply the place of genius? Emphatically, no! Industry may compensate for paucity of talent, is a common heritage, and its presence or absence is a matter of degree, and whatever results are attributed to talent are the joint product of talent multiplied by industry.

A Cow Milked by a Snake.

John Yard, a farmer living eight miles from Trenton, N. J., has been pasturing a number of cows in a lot on his place. For some time he noticed that one of the finest of them every morning was as dry as though she had been milked. He was puzzled at this, and as an experiment changed her to another pasture. She immediately began to give the usual amount of milk. After a few days she was returned to the old pasture with the other cows, and at once began to come in dry as before. Finally Mr. Yard had a boy watch the cow. The mystery was then quickly solved. The boy reported that early in the morning a large snake. "the biggest he had ever seen," came and breakfasted from the cow's udder, draining it completely. The cow did not seem to mind the operation. The facts are vouched for by responsible persons who have seen the snake taking his meal. [illegible]

How Watch Cases are Made.

It is a fact not generally known that the James Boss' Gold Watch Cases really contain more pure gold than many "solid" gold cases The demand for these watch cases has led to the manufacture of a very poor grade of solid gold watch cases—low in quality, and deficient in quantity. These cases are made from 4⅔ to 10 karats, and a 5 or 6 karat case is often sold for 12 or 14 karats. It is NOT economy to buy a watch case so poor in quality that it will soon lose its color, or one so soft that it will lose its shape and fail to shut tight, thus letting in dust and damaging the works, or one so thin that a slight blow will break the crystal, and perhaps the movement. It IS economy to buy a James Boss' Gold Watch Case, in which NONE of these things ever occur. This watch case is not an experiment—it has been made nearly thirty years.

HAZLETON, PA., Oct. 24, 1882.

I sold two James Boss' Gold Watch Cases thirty years ago, when they first came out, and they are in good condition yet. One of them is carried by a carpenter, Mr. L. W. Drake, of Hazleton, and only shows the wear in one or two places; the other by Mr. Bowman, of Cunningham, Pa.; and I can produce one or both of these cases at any time.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

Handsome Tribute from a Political Opponent.

"Bob" Burdette in Burlington Hawkeye.

If Governor John P. St. John should be elected President of these United States, there would be a perfectly unspoiled citizen in the White House. The elevation would not hurt him a particle and the friends of to-day would still be his dearest friends to-morrow. Unassuming, modest, strong in his friendships and convictions, I believe there is no honester man in public life in America; no man no more conscientious, more consistent in his teaching and his practice. Through the long, hard, single-handed struggle with adverse fortunes, St. John at last reached a high place and reaped his rewards, and he has come through the long fight with clean hands; without a smear or a taint upon his character. And, strong and pronounced as are his qualities as a leader of men, an executive officer, an orator, the brightest traits of the man's character shine forth most brilliantly in his domestic life; in the social circle. It has often been my good fortune to have him a guest in my home, and no man meets a warmer welcome at its doors. From the little woman whose voice will never bid him welcome to an earthly home again, down to the Prince, the whole house was glad when his well-known voice was heard in the hall, and many a long afternoon and merry evening has flown away like an hour with anecdote, reminiscence, argument, suggestion, story of travel and adventures of long ago, dropping from his lips. All children love St. John, and he knows how to talk to them. Some of the best addresses to the little people I ever heard were made by him in the little villages of Ardmore and Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, to the most delighted audiences that ever listened to a Presidential candidate. His voice, his manner, are pleasing, easy and attractive; his eyes are tender as a woman's; his sympathies quick and earnest, and withal he carries in his well-poised head a stock of hard, honest, rare common sense. He comes of good old Huguenot stock, as his name indicates, and "Saint" is the quaint and pleasant name by which his near relatives address him. He makes friends of men without apparently trying to win them; where he is best known his strength is greatest; and whether he polls ten thousand votes or ten million he will be the same St. John—a big-hearted, clear-headed, honest, consistent man. I am aware, by the way, that the Hawkeye isn't an overwhelmingly enthusiastic St. John paper, but then it is a great broad-souled paper that rejoices to speak the truth about a foeman worthy of its stell pen.

Pelicans of the Pin-feather Age on Their Wedding Tour.

At Hannibal, Mo., there entered the car a male and female pelican of the tender age when pin-feathers are shed. Evidently they were on their wedding tour, and as near Paradise as a woman with number nine feet and a man with two gallons of oil can get. They occupied one seat, and had at least half of it to spare. He had his left arm around her shoulder, and his left hand toyed with her saddle-flap while his right chucked her about the basement story of her mouth. For an hour the young Benedict was very demonstrative and the passengers were just ready to assault the conductor for having two tenders on the train, when nature got the best of affection in the case of the young husband. His eyes assumed a dreary look and his hand dropped idly from her ear. She endured his apparent neglect in silent submission for three minutes, and then she reproachfully articulated. "Charlie?"

He roused himself and ask, "What is it, sugarlump?"

"Do you love me, Charlie?"

"I'm a mule if I don't!"

"You love me truly?"

"Yes.

"Then twig my ear some more."

He twigged.—[St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Religious Intelligence.

Bishop Seabury was the first American bishop consecrated after the independence of the United States, the consecration taking place at Iverness, Scotland, 1784. St. Peter's Episcopal Church, in the village of Westchester, was his first parish before consecration. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson is now the rector of this church, and a centennial service of the bishop's consecration has just been held.

A meeting has just been held in Marburg, Germany, with the object of forming a confederation of the various reformed churches of the empire. They number something like a million and a half of adherents, and have no bond of union save the Heidelberg catethism. In the removal of civil boundaries the ecclesiastical divisions have remained, and the churches have lost many privileges. such as control of universities.

"It is not, perhaps, creditable to the Christianity of New Yorkers," says the Churchman, "that the one refuge for discharged convicts in this city was started by a man who had spent 35 years in prisons in all part of the world. What ought to have been done over and over again, perhaps, by Christian people was done by a supposed. It is as if the compassionate spirit of Christ toward the criminal classes had been learned not out of prison, but in it."

"Now, Bridget, I don't like this flirting,
You will bring my house a bad name."
"Well, sure, I don't thing of parting,
It's meself that is plazed wid the same."
"Look, here, girl, the day that I hired you,
You said to no cousins you would speak;
I did not think so many admired you—
You've had twenty here in a week."

"Well, misses, you're very diverting—
I'm an Orishman, born and bred;
An' this is a free land, for certain—
Would you have me kape in my bed?
There's niver one hour in the day, mum,
But carriages come after you;
But now there's the owl lad to pay, mum,
Because I have followers, too."

"See here, Miss, my temper is rising,
A few words I want you to know—
I'm sure I'll do something surprising—
You or I from this house must go."
"Well, howly St. Nicholas save us,
It's not to your likes I'd be rude,
Ye'es can go, an' sure when ye lave us,
I hope you will find some place as good.

The Women's Candidate.

It is time, it is time for the women to rule
The Nation, as well as the home and the school,
Regardless of reckless and rude ridicule!
They should fight
For the right,
Ignoring the fact that a man's like a mule.

Three cheers for their candidate Belva, the bold!
She's brave and she's gallant, and better than gold—
A model of wamanhood fair to behold;
Though, in truth,
She's no youth,
She's one of the kind that will never grow old.
Oh, soon may she sit in the President's chair,
Her rich robes resplendent with roses most rare,
And diamonds decking her dark, wavy hair!
Such a sight
Would delight
All the world and would make the monarchies stare.
Now, women, all work for your queen with a vim,
Unheeding the scoffing of each little him;
For soon all his glory and fame will grow dim.
If you are bold
You will behold
A precious, pert President, bretty and prim.

THE GOLD NECKLACE.

"Do you think it pretty? It is very old, and so odd. My grandmother wore it in her girlhood; it afterward became my mother's, and I have treasured it for the sake of its associations."

Dr. Raymond took the shining ornament from Miss Stratton's hand to admire its quaint workmanship. It was a circlet of gold, twisted in a fanciful shape, from which depended a tiny cross, this latter holding a ruby in its head.

However the doctor may have admired the pretty bauble in question, it was patent that his admiration for its wearer was still greater. Nor did this reflect discredit upon his taste, for the dark, piquant face, lit by great Oriental eyes and framed in feathery curls of night-black hair; the ripe lips, ruddier than autumn berries, and the rounded cheek, which held a color like the red heart of a damask rose, would have elicited admiration from any man in the full posession of his senses.

Up to this time Dr. Raymond had never been in love—a somewhat singular fact, for he was past 30, a physician of good repute and the possessor of a fair share of this world's goods, and withal a very handsome man.

Whether or not he loved Georgina Stratton the doctor himself was barely able to decide. Certain it was that he was interested—nay, more, fascinated. In truth a proposal had been trembling on his tongue for weeks, nothing preventing its utterance save the unaccountable cowardice he felt in the fair one's presence.

He had resolved to learn his fate from the girl's lips upon this very afternoon, and with this very object in view he proposed a ride to Union Grove.

Yet still he sat awkwardly twisting Miss Georgina's necklace, about his fingers and pouring forth a torrent of small talk, cursing himself mentally the while for his stupidity.

"Ah, doctor, said Georgina, roguishly, "I fear you have quite forgotton our projected ride. I have not, however, and must beg you to excuse me while I prepare."

The doctor colored, bowed assent, and the lady glided gracefully from the room.

He was not quite alone, for away by a distant window a young girl sat, half buried in fleecy clouds of muslin, on which she was busily sewing. Dr. Raymond was a frequent and unceremonious visitor at the home of the Strattons, dropping in upon Miss Georgina while at her music, her sewing, at any time, and with all sorts of pretenses.

He had seen the sewing girl before, but until then they had scarcely noticed her. Unconsciously his gaze had become fixed upon the slight, drooping figure, the beautifully molded head, with its shining bands of nut-brown hair, and the fair, delicate profile. A broad sunbeam had fallen in at the window and glided down on the shining hair, until it changed from brown to warm gold, and lighting upon the girl's face until it looked strangely soft and spiritual. Just then she lifted her soft, hazel eyes and met Dr. Raymond's gaze.

A vivid blush stained the whiteness of her cheek, and he, conscious of rudeness, withdrew his eyes and began to toy nervously with Georgina's necklace.

He fancied the girl looked pale and overworked—thought what a dreary sort of life this must be for one so young and——. The appearance of Georgina interrupted the current of his thoughts. She was looking bewitchingly coquettish, with nodding plumes and streaming ribbons. The carriage stood at the door, and the girl at the window soon lost sight of the pair as they rode down under the long avenue of trees.

"What a deuced fool I have been:" Dr. Raymond said to solitude and his cigar, as he sat in his office two days afterward. "The girl likes me; I am on the best possible terms with Stratton père—indeed, there's no earthly reason why Georgina should not be mine. I've fully resolved at least twenty times to propose, but she's a magnificent creature—she's a face—a glorious head, and one [illegible] man may carry off his [illegible] fore my eyes if I continue this mode of courtship.

"I'll see her to-night and learn my destiny at once."

And here the doctor's soliloquy ended; but from the determined expression of his countenance one might safely conclude that his courage was fully equal to the task of making a declaration of love.

An hour later found him in the family sitting-room of the Strattons, where Georgina, seated at her sewing, looked more provokingly bewitching than ever. He missed the pretty seamstress, but a sharp-nosed, middle-aged woman occupied her seat by the window.

"I discharged the girl yesterday," Miss Stratton said, in reply to the doctor's inquiry. "You remember the gold necklace you were admiring when last here? I did not replace it, but left it lying on the table. The girl was entirely alone in my absence, and had gone when I returned. The necklace was not to be found, though a thorough search was made.

"This Miss May is a stranger, but her manner pleased me at first and I employed her. Indeed, had circumstances been less dark I would not have believed her guilty of the theft. I told her my suspicions when she returned to work, promising that if the restitution was made the matter should go no further. She colored, then turned pale and finally burst into tears. Her manner corroborated my surmises, though she strenuously denied the theft."

Dr. Raymond looked shocked.

"I think there must be some mistake in this matter," he said. "I never saw a face which impressed me more strongly in its possessor's innocence. Indeed, Miss Georgina——"

"Indeed, Dr. Raymond," repeated the young lady with a smile, though an angry glance from her eyes made the doctor quail a little, "you are enthusiastic in the praise of my quondam seamstress. But surely your good sense should teach you that young people should not always be judged by their outward seeming. The girl appeared innocent—timidity was probably assumed."

Thus the conversation dropped, and again, after an hour's chat, Dr. Henry Raymond returned to his home without having breathed a thought of the tender passion in Georgina's ear. And, if the truth must be told, his thoughts were somewhat disturbed by the pale little seamstress, in whose innocence he firmly believed.

A boy was waiting for him at the office. A young lady was dangerously ill; would the doctor come immediately with him? They were poor, the boy said; there was only the widow and her daughter; but the doctor need not fear for his fees.

Patients were somewhat of a rarity in that healthful Western village, and the medical man obeyed the summons with alacrity.

It was a new brown cottage in the outskirts of the town which the boy had indicated as the place, before which Dr, Raymond paused. A pale, sad-looking lady ushered him into one of the tiniest, cleanliest and plainest of rooms he had ever seen, but the flowering vines outside the window, the geraneum and heliotrope within; the bouquets of freshly cut flowers upon the table, and the few choice volumes upon hanging shelves, did not escape his eyes as he listened to the mother's account of her daughter's illness.

"She had never been strong. Of late she had been overworked from necessity, and mental troubles and anxiety had brought upon her this illness."

The doctor could hardly avoid an exclamation of surprise when he recognized in the sick girl the seamstress whose misfortune had so interested him. He took the little white hand in his, holding it longer than it might seem necessary. But the girl looked so pretty with the fever flushes staining the whiteness of her cheeks, and her brown eyes lit with the fever sparkles, that the doctor was not so culpable after all. His pity for her increased as his indignation rose against Miss Stratton.

Day after day found him at Edith May's bedside, and he grew daily more interested in his gentle patient. The mother he discovered to be ladylike—refined, even. As his acquaintance progressed he learned of her simple history.

The husband and father had been a well-to-do farmer in one of our New England States, but meeting with heavy losses, was at last compelled to mortgage his farm. Falling a victim to ill-health, he was unable to meet the demands of his creditors, his property was seized, and with his few remaining hundreds he had emigrated West, hoping to retrieve his health and provide a comfortable home for his dear ones. This, alas! was a fatal delusion, for in three weeks after his arrival he fell the victim of a brief illness. The daughter had been carefully educated, but there was no opening in that vicinity for teachers, especially one so poor and unpretending. Sewing was the only alternative. A situation was obtained with Mrs. Stratton, and the reader knows the sequel.

Edith May sat in a great arm chair in the little sitting-room. An interesting convalescent she was undoubtedly, for Dr. Raymond found it necessary to continue his daily visits, though his prescriptions had long since been dispensed with. But, then, she looked so exquisitely lovely in her neat, white wrapper—the pink bloom fluttering back into the creamy cheeks, her soft hair unbound and flowing of its own sweet will in rippling curls.

Upon this afternoon the doctor had drawn his chair close to that of the invalid and gathered the thin, fluttering hand in his—which right he claimed, no doubt, by virtue of his office as medical adviser. And Edith, poor little Edith, was growing rosier than the most exuberant health would warrant. Alas for man's fickleness! Dr. Raymond, the whilom admirer of the [illegible] beauty, Georgina Stratton, had been pouring into the sick girl's ear the impassioned love-words he had never found courage to say to the lady of fashion. Perhaps it was because the little trembler at his side was less imposing that he pleaded his cause so bravely.

"Say you will be my wife, Edith, my darling!" he whispered.

Perhaps the roses glowed still brighter in her cheeks; perhaps the small hand imprisoned in the doctor's palm trembled more violently: perhaps her voice shook and faltered, still the answer was decided:

"No! no! Dr. Raymond, I cannot become your wife."

"No, Edith? You do not love me, then? I have been mistaken!"

He had risen from his seat, and there was perceptible quiver about the firm lips. But the honest blue eyes looked straight into hers.

"Oh, Edith! my darling! my darling? do not tell me that—anything but that?!"

"I do love you," and the girl's eyes were full of tears; "love you as I never loved before, never can love again; yet I can never, never become your wife. There is a stain upon my reputation which must be removed before I can link my life with yours. I feel deeply your generosity, but while I am suspected of so vile a crime as theft I will not disgrace you. It were enough that Dr. Raymond's wife be poor and friendless—she should be above suspicion."

"Edith, this is folly. Innocence will assert itself sooner or later. That Miss Stratton has foully misjudged you does not affect my love for you in the least. If all the world thought you guilty I should still ask you this question, "Will you be my wife?"

He paused before her, and his face was more eloquent in its pleading than his words. But the girl's features gave no sign of indecision.

"No, Dr. Raymond, it is useless to urge me. "My decision is final."

There was nothing more to be said; the doctor saw that, and something like petulance was in his manner as he resumed his walk up and down the room. In truth, he was thoroughly out of patience with the girl in persisting in what he thought quixotic folly. An intimate acquaintance would have known that he was thoroughly roused, from his peculiar nervous gestures, which he was wont to indulge in when under the influence of strong feeling. These sometimes bordered on the ludicrous, such as twirling his fingers rapidly, stroking his hair and whiskers, plunging his hands deeply into his pockets, etc. These peculiarities, with certain other absent tricks, made him the butt of much good-humored railery while in school and at college.

Edith May noticed these with surprise—she had never seen him in such a mood before. She saw him plunge one hand fiercely into his breast pocket while his face was turned from hers, and heard something fall upon the floor.

He stopped to pick it up, and a suspicion of the man's insanity actually intruded itself upon her mind, as peal after peal of hearty laughter escaped from his lips, while his whole frame shook.

At length he turned toward her, holding before her astonished gaze Miss Georgina Stratton's necklace! His mirth then seemed infectious, and her silvery laughter mingled with his.

"But how did you come by it?" she asked wonderingly.

"I am unable to inform you, as I have not the slightest recollection of appropriating the articles but suppose I must have absently placed it in my coat pocket while awaiting Miss Stratton's readiness for the ride on that afternoon. As I have not worn the garment until now it was not discovered. I have performed many such freaks through my absence of mind, but none which has promised to lead to such blissful results as this. But for this little episode, I should perhaps never have known you, Edith. Now I will make restitution to Miss Stratton, you will be exculpated and in that case I believe you have promised to become mine."

The conversation was extended still further, but we will not weary our readers with lovers' nonsense.

But it may be interesting to add that Dr. Eaymond led out little Edith to the altar soon after. And to this day he will persist in saying that the crowning blessing of his life came to him by virtue of Miss Stratton's "Gold Necklace."

Wouldn't Stand it Any Longer.

Henry Irving has a great fund of anecdote, and he regaled an audience on board the Parisian on the last night of the voyage to Quebec with one of his best stories. After various members of the Lyceum Company had entertained, warbled and recited, Mr. Irving made a little speech, in the course of which he said, that many years ago he happened to be playing in Liverpool, and seized a rare opportunity to spend a holiday in Wales with three brother actors, one of whom was not at all lavish with his money, but allowed his companions to bear the burdens of the day's expenses. When the party returned to Birkenhead and were about to cross the ferry over the Mersey, the cost of which was one penny, this gentleman rushed forward and said, "Now, look here, I won't stand it any longer. You three have paid enough for to-day. This expense shall be mine!" Mr. Irving remarked that, coming in at the tail of the evenings programme, his contribution was very like the generosity of his early friend.

Couldn't Wait for the Papers.

On the evening of the day on which President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation was issued at Washington a copy thereof came by telegraph to the Boston Journal office, and on the same evening a meeting of Free Soilers had assembled at Tremont Temple. While the night editor of the Journal was engaged in preparing the dispatch for transmission to the composition room, Judge Thomas Russell entered the editorial sanctum all out of breath, and inquired as to the truth of such a proclamation having been promulgated by the President, and was shown the dispatch sheets on which it was written. He begged the loan of them for a quarter of an hour, but this was refused as being against all rule. The Judge then seized them and run with all speed from the editorial room followed by the night editor but was not caught. He reached the platform of the Tremont Temple, interrupted the speaking and read the proclamation when a scene of excitment followed which baffled description. Some talk was had about the proprietor of the Journal, (Col. Charles O. Rogers) having Judge Russell arrested for theft, but this did not take place. This was the first time that the proclamation was publicly read in Boston,—Lowell (Mass.) Times.

A Terrible State of Affairs.

Dr. Luke, an English expert, declares it is impossible to describe the horrors he witnessed in the Government Insane Asylum of the Province of Quebec. In the upper flat in a small room he found 60 men confined under restraint, hand cuffed and strapped to chairs. In other parts of the building he found cells without windows and with wretched ventilation. In a dark cell he discovered a man naked, lying on straw and handcuffed to the belt; in another, a man deaf and pumb similarly manacled and without bed or bedding. The women's room he described as a chamber of horror more terrible than the part where the men are kept. The asylum is under the charge of nuns. A government inquiry will be instituted.

HOW REPULSIVE

Is bad breath. and yet how many otherwise attractive, polite, and particular people afflict their friends with the foul odor of their breath. If there was no remedy for this, it might excite our sympathy, but as there is no need of having a foul breath, it is an unpardonable breach of good manners to obtrude such an offence on good society.

Foul breath arises from disordered digestion which can be corrected by using Sulphur Bitters, and the result will be a pure, sweet breath.

OUR LOCAL CANDIDATES.

The action of Monday's nominating convention in Oswego, by the Democrats of the First district, filled the only vacant office upon their ticket. The choice again falling upon one of our own townsmen. The important office therefore of Member of Assembly is to be filled by either Henry C. Howe or Hon Willard Johnson. Of the ability and fitness of the Republican candidate we have already spoken, and in terms of praise; Mr. Howe is a lawyer of considerable eminence and is well known throughout the State. Mr. Johnson has once filled the office, giving entire satisfaction to his constituents. Both are zealous party men, and will doubtless receive the full party vote. Another of our local candidates is Mr. S. B. Mead, who is named to fill the responsible office of District Attorney. Mr. Mead is a man of recognized ability; of good habits and sterling integrity; he has grown up in our midst and is entitled to the undivided support of his friends. It would seem to an impartial observer that it will be better to locate the district attorney in this part of the county where so much official business is transacted, and we feel justified in saying that if elected Mr. Mead will discharge the duties of the office honestly, fairly and economically.

CANDIDATES do you hear the Slogan.

IT is rumored that Roscoe Conkling is out for Cleveland.

William Griffiths, a contractor of Arkansas, demanded pay for two quarters, amounting to 24,000. The department contends that the contractor has already been overpaid for a fraudulent expedition upwards of $6,000. The issues are much the same as those involved in all the star route cases. Assistant Attorney Douglass, of the department of justice, says the civil suits against the star route men are being vigorously pushed.

THE marriage of the President with Miss Tillie Frelinghuysen has been arranged and will take place at Washington during January. J. W. Kimball, a young man well known in Rochester, where he has lived all his life, is charged with forging checks for various amounts on Powers' banking house and on the Traders' National bank, which he presented for payment to E. Ocumpaugh and James Bygraves, business men of Rochester. It is said that he has fled to Hamilton, Ontario, leaving his wife.

Samuel Goodman, a farmer over 70 years old, living a mile and a half west of Brewerton, left the residence of Charles Smith in the town of West Monroe, Saturday just after dinner, to return to his home. To save eight or ten miles travel he made a cut across Big Bay swamp, which at that point is about one mile from road to road. In doing this he lost his way and wandered about in mud and water, part of the time hip deep, during the afternoon, all that night and until late in the afternoon of Sunday, when he came out to the lake at the mouth of Big Bay creek. Some men fishing there took him across to what is known as Jimmie Somers Point, from which place he found his way back to Mr. Smith's, his starting point. When found he was nearly exhausted from exposure to cold and water, having kept traveling all night to keep from freezing. His son Frank, with a hundred men or more, searched the swamp all day Sunday with the expectation of finding him drowned or dying.—[Utica Herald.

COUNTY COMMENTS.

From Our Exchanges.

Hon. Geo. B. Sloan, of Oswego, will deliver an address to the Republicans of Phœnix, this evening.

An effort is being made to have telephone line from Hannibal to Oswego. Considerable money has been subscribed towards the enterprise.

There was a large Republican meeting at Hannibal, Saturday evening.

Milk Adulteration.

The Albany Argus says: "At the State Treasurer's office yesterday, the sum of $62.90 was received from Sullivan county, who were convicted of adulterating their milk. This is the third amount received by the State Treasurer of fines imposed under the law passed last winter, and signed by Governor Cleveland, providing against deception in dairy products. The sum total received from seven fines for adulteration of milk is $311.70. This is fair for a beginning, and may lead to better protection for the honest producer as well as the honest consumer.

November Magazines.

Of our literary visitors, none are more welcome than the monthlies. The ATLANTIC comes fresh from the Riverside press of Cambridge. This sterling magazine now in its twenty-eighth year steadily increases in interest; its original articles are always attractive and full of sweetness and charm, and as varied as the tastes of its readers. Two more chapters are given in the present number of S. Weir Mitchell's great story, entitled "In War Time." "The Lakes of Italy," commenced in September number and described in a most fascinating manner and next to the actual sight, is reading this charming description.

THE NOVEMBER CENTURY

opens with W. D. Howell's new story "The Rise of Silas Lapham," whom he introduces as one of the "Solid Men of Boston," and a fine type of the successful American. This story will doubtless prove one of Howell's best efforts. "The Chinese Theatre," is an illustrated article fully characteristic of this curious, ingenious people. This is followed by a useful article on "Household Drainage,' by G. E. Warring, and full of common' sense suggestions. The writer gives the general principles that should govern in the construction of drainage and the reader will find it a much deeper subject than is generally thought. "The Battle of Bull Run," is the first of a series of illustrated articles of the late war, to be contributed by the leading generals north and south. This one is from the graceful pen of Gen'l. Beauregard, and will be read with interest. There are forty other articles all calculated to charm and entertain the reader. "Topics of the Time," is one of the features of this magazine and as usual is full of suggestive topics.

ST. NICAOLAS,

for November, is one of the best numbers of this finely illustrated children's magazine. Its pages are full of delightful and instructive reading for young folks. This is the first number of the twelfth volume and the good things herein with those promised make this an indispensible visitor.

To people [illegible] Pardons [illegible] neither [illegible] ousing for [illegible] depth of 1,500 to 2,000 feet [illegible] supplies them with fluid gas from her vast subterranean reservoirs. Yes, such is the case. It is drilled for in the same manner as oil is sought, and it might be added that nearly all oil wells furnish more or less gas that bring the force which causes the oil to flow, on the principle of a cyphon.

As this article is intended only for those who, as above stated, live remote from oildom, it may not be out of place to describe the drilling process. A spot is located generally on the side of a mountain, at its top, or in the valley below, which is usually an unbroken belt of woodland, a space is cleared for the derrick, which is about 22 feet square at its base, 78 feet high, and tapers to 4 feet at its top, representing a truncated pyramid. The derrick is made of two-inch plank nailed together in the form of right angles, the joint of one being broken at the middle of the other, and the sections. Every eight feet being strengthened by cross pieces, each space being further supported by an X formed by diagonally crossing pieces between corners. Against the side is a ladder to enable one to climb up to the top, where a pulley is placed, over which a rope or cable, as it is called, is run, one end of which is fast to the stem of the drill, the other to a large drum situated at the front of the derrick, near its floor. On one end of this drum is a large wooden wheel with pins of wood about an inch in diameter, and 6 in length around the side on the fellows, while the edge is surrounded by a large iron band that regulates its speed; on the other end is a wheel not as large, but grooved on its edge in which a rope is placed (as the strap on a sewing machine) that is connected with another wheel, which is connected also with the engine, and a walking beam placed on a pillar 16 feet from the ground, by means of the drum and cable, the drill which with the stem or handle, a large bar of iron about three inches in diameter, and 20 feet in length, weighing nearly a ton often two stems in length, is lowered to the ground. At first, the bit in size is 9 inches, but tapers to 6 inches and when lowered it is raised and let fall by the motion of the walking beam, as the dasher in a churn, the man who guides it turning it at each stroke, adding water from time to time, its ponderous weight driving it deeper and deeper into the earth until it reached the desired depth, every few hours the drill i withdrawn and the mud baled out with a hollow tube about 6 to 12 feet in length, and a valve at the bottom, then the drill is replaced; often the cable breaks and the drillers spend as much as five weeks at times in recovering the drill, at other times as many hours will get it. The most ingenious devices have been invented for this purpose.

When their bailings show a certain dark gray sand or fine gravel, they are aware that they have "struck" first, second, third or fourth sand, as the case may be, then they have to be cauties of fire, as the escaping gas often rushes up suddenly, and ignites at the blacksmith forge, which is found in every derrick to sharpen the drills or mend any tools that may be broken, or from the lamp, and burn up the "rig" which includes derrick, engine house and shaft or belt house. When the proper depth is attained, a tube, holding from 5 to 60 groats, is loaded with nitroglycerine, an explosive formed by the union of nitric and sulphuric acid on glycerine. On top of this tube is placed four percussion caps covered with a piece of round sheet iron, and the whole lowered to with a few feet of the bottom. All being in readiness, a small weight is dropped from the top of the hole, which explodes the mass. The men run to a safe distance, in a moment a roaring rumbling noise is heard like the noise of a large cataract, then a volume of dark oil is shot upward, retaining the size of the hole, into the air a distance of a hundred feet, together with broken rocks and tin, which breaks in the form of a spray, and coming down on the spotless derrick, initiating it as a full-fledged oil or gas well, or marks it as a dry hole. In the latter case, salt water, or water that was poured in together with a shower of broken rocks is thrown out instead of oil gas. Having now supposed that we have found what we were in search of, a gas well, the next thing to do is to lay our pipe from the well to the village or city we are going to supply. If a city, then we will lay as our main or supply pipe, one ten inches in diameter, and when we reach the city limits we connect this with our principal gasometer; then we lay two pipes from the gasometer, one called a high pressure to run direct to large establishments, schools, churches, and places using large quantities. The other a low pressure pipe that is laid to several gasometers of smaller size, that receive only sufficient gas to supply a certain pressure that insures safety and uniformity.

From these the distributing pipes are ramified through every street, and laid at a distance of 3 to 6 feet beneath the surface when any person wishes to use gas he makes application at the company's office, which binds him to submit to the rules of the company, who send men to dig a trench from the nearest distributing pipe to his house in which is laid an inch pipe that is carried under the floor to the stove in which it is to be used. Then it is brought up and attached to the fire-box; if a heating stove, a round cast iron flattened perforated tube is placed in the fire chamber connected with the pipe now waiting at the stove door near which is a throttle valve to admit or shut off the gas as needed. A match is lit and laid on the burner and you may have such a fire as you need.

To each burner is attached a small globe of hollow metal, the portion farthest from the stove being perforated with five round holes one-half inch in diameter to admit air, which gives a more perfect combustion.

To one who has never sat by a glowing gas fire and enjoyed the heat, without the bother of [illegible]

[illegible] ever. To the present [illegible] there are now about 1,500 stoves attached to the system and more being added daily. The company own a large gas territory which will supply the city for many years. Another means of transporting gas has been brought into use at Pittsburg, which is to force it into tank cars under a high pressure and deliver it to parties at any distance.

The Utica Markets.

Our market was dull enough until 5 o'clock p. m., when buyers began to bestir themselves and take in stock at a somewhat reduced prices from last week's. The offerings consisted of Septembers and Octobers in nearly equal proportions. Some, who did not sell last week, sent forward a double portion to-day, and one who closed out their Septembers a week ago, sold the first week of October to-day. The make of one month is equally as good as that of the other. Several Lewis county factories were represented and sold here to-day, and that accounts for the increased amount of transactions. One large factory from that county offered all its Septembers and Octobers together, about 550 boxes, but did not sell, on account of not being satisfied with the prices. We noticed that two houses that have not been buying very extensively of late, took hold sharply to-day and bought most of the best cheese on the market.

Transactions of the day were as follows: 5 lots, 600 boxes, at 11⅜c.; 41 lots, 4,172 boxes, at 11½c.; 2 lots, 124 boxes, at 11⅝c.; 12 lots, 1,066 boxes, at 11¾c.; 8 lots, 1,056 boxes, at 11⅞c.; 5 lots 5,471 boxes, at 12c.; 2 lots small white cheese for home trade, 125 boxes, at 12¼c.; and 5 lots, 640 boxes. Commissions 575 boxes. Total 8,905 boxes. Ruling price 11½c. Transactions of corresponding day last year 8,325 boxes, ruling price 11¼c. But cheese was then sold down a week later than it was to-day. Two years ago transactions were 8,780 boxes at a ruling of 12¼c.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, Oct. 27.—Cheese.—Buyers represented quite a depreciation in the New York market and under the circumstances it is somewhat surprising that prices have to-day held up so well. It was quite a question for a time, and till quite late, what the ruling price would be, some contending that it was fairly 12c. The cheese was generally of fine quality, and this accounts for the good prices maintained. To-day's sales close out the September stock, and some factories have sold a few days of the October make. There was a sharp demand for the finest stock, but the poorer grades, what little there was offered, were neglected. As the fine cheese is about gone it will not surprise our factorymen if the prices suffer somewhat. Following are the sales:

Lots	Boxes	Price
8	454	11½
24	1,817	11¾
27	1,976	12
1	53	p t.
8	351	Cons.
78	4,664
Farm Dairy	1,135
Total	5,799

FARM DAIRIES.—Sales in the forenoon of farm dairy cheese and the smaller factories amounted to 1,135 boxes. Prices ranged at 11¼ and 12½c., there were two or three lots at the latter price but the bulk sold at 12c.

BUTTER.—Sales reached 115 packages and prices were 25 and 27c.; the bulk sold at 27c. and it was wholly farm dairy butter. We learned of no creamery selling.

AT FULTON.

The market Monday evening was the dullest of the season, the cause was no doubt due to the inclement weather. There was but fifteen factories represented with 1,000 boxes of cheese of which 700 boxes were sold at Utica ruling price, which was 11½. Salesmen were disappointed in price.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

For the Cure of Kidney and Liver Complaints, Constipation, and all disorders arising from an impure state of the BLOOD.

To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex it is an unfailing friend. All Druggists. One Dollar a bottle, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

FEARFULLY COMMON.

Kidney Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages.—A Brilliant Recovery.

There is something starting in the rapid increase of Kidney diseases among the American people within a few years past. Many cases peculiar to certain classes tend to produce and aggravate these troubles—as, for example, careless living, overwork, and exposure. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is often congratulated on the exceptional success of his medicine called FAVORITE REMEDY, in arresting and radically curing these most painful and dangerous disorders. Proofs of this, like the following, are constantly brought to his attention and are published by him for the sake of thousands of other sufferers whom he desires to reach and benefit. The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the fine and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place or business on the corner of Main and Union Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR, For ten years I have been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except those who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this drectse sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others.

Yours, etc., LYMAN CRAWFORD.

When the time arrived it was decided not to hold the meeting, so one of the speakers, having a little leisure strolled into Eggleston's book store. While there a Republican, with the plea of looking more closely at the picture of Mr. St. John, which was on a badge worn by the temperance man, took it off and after inspecting it, replaced it with a Blaine and Logan badge of similar make, all unknown to the wearer. He then went around to the Democratic headquarters and made a short St. John speech, when his badge was examined by the assembled Democracy. The surprised and disgusted look upon the wearer showed that he was innocent of any intent to deceive, but the laugh he received was not calculated to soothe his ruffled temper. He was mad. He was also looking for revenge. Then the different persons present commenced making suggestions. Finally an Oswego man who was present decided to take it to Oswego and ship it back to the original owner. Accordingly a number of "Turn the Rascals Out," "Open the Books," "Mulligan Letters," and other similar publications, with a note: "My Dear Billy—Burn this letter," were shipped the next day by express which the joker promptly received with "charges to follow." He will probably think twice before he plays another prank on the disciples of St. John.

Oswego Democratic Mass Meeting.

On Monday last occurred the Democratic mass meeting in Oswego. The attendance was large notwithstanding the unpropitious weather. A number of out-of-town excursions, which had been promised failed to attend when it was learned that Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks was not to be present. The speech of Ex-Governor Dorshimer was a most earnest appeal to the Democracy to stand firm, declaring that New York State was sure to give its electoral vote for the Democratic nominees. The address by Hon. R. T. Merrick was well received, and much enthusiasm was manifested. The party managers feel confident of polling a large vote, and were never better organized.

Gas at Wolcott.

The Wolcott News says it has been known for years that there exists near the village of Wolcott a gas spring, and by many it is believed this gas may be utilized for lighting the village. The gas oozes from the side of the bluff bordering the creek which runs through the village. It has been found that it readily burns upon being lighted with a match or taper. At the instance of Mr. Jas. Wright, of that village, a gentleman who has had considerable experience in enterprises of this sort was invited to come and look the ground over. He has been here and is satisfied that there is gas at this point. An effort will be made to utilize it.

Bacon's Opening.

One of the principle attractions in our midst last week, was the grand opening at F. E. Bacon's dry goods store. His display of dry goods and millinery was gorgeous and artistic. The carpet exhibit on the second floor was a new feature in Mr. Bacon's annual openings. The utterances of delight by the many admirers as they strolled through this grand palace must have fully repaid Mr. Bacon and his worthy clerks for their efforts put forth in fitting up such a pageant. This is truly an enterprising firm.

A Pleasant Gathering.

A phantom party was given at the residence of H. E. Nichols on Fourth street last evening in honor of his daughter, Miss Carrie. A large number of her young friends were present and not a few older ones. The house was handsomely trimmed and illuminated for the occasion. Dancing was the principal amusement of the evening. Parker's orchestra furnished the music. Before the jolly gathering dispersed they partook of a bountiful repast. No opportunity was missed by Mr. and Mrs. Nichols in making the evening an enjoyable one for the young people.

The Democratic clubs of Oswego will be present and join the Fulton clubs in a parade. Hon. D. M. Wilbur and Hon. A. D. Wales will be present and deliver addresses.

Every lover of Sunday school and its work is requested to attend an address at Oswego Falls by Rev. Charles Olmstead and others Nov. 2nd at 2:30 p. m. Also to attend and take part in a model Sunday school, conducted by Prof. A. Boothby, of Fulton.—[Oswego Times.

The case of Cavanaugh vs. Irving was brought up again last Thursday. Irving was brought from Baldwinsville on a subpœna to testify in the matter. Thomas Cavanaugh was charged with assault in the second degree, and appeared before Police Justice Van Wagenen for examination, which was postponed until November 7th, at 9 a. m.

On Monday evening of this week, there was a Prohibition meeting held at the Sons of Temperance rooms in this village, which was addressed by Dr. W. L. Woodbury in his usual happy and enthusiastic manner. On account of the enclemency of the weather, many were detained from going, who lost much by not hearing this earnest and convincing appeal to temperance people, as to "why they should vote for St John."

The first successful party of the season took place at the home of Miss May Loomis, on Third street, Monday evening last. About forty of our young people enjoyed a most delightful evening in dancing (to excellent music), and social intercourse. It is probable that many more such pleasant gatherings will be indulged in during the long and severe winter before us. The hostess, assisted by the Misses Foster, Jennings and Youngs, entertained her hosts handsomely.

There was a large attendance at the rink last night and all seemed to enjoy themselves, especially those who put on the rollers for the first time, which was amusement for them and the lookers on. At 9:15 the floor was cleared and Mr. Harding, late manager made a few remarks and introduced Mr. Ruggles of Bridgeport, Conn., as manager in the future. Mr. Ruggles made a few trite remark and stated that he had a very pleasant duty to perform which was in presenting Mr. Harding with a beautiful ring through Mr. John Swan and many other friends who wished to be remembered in the future. At 9:30 Mr. Richard Annis, of Oswego, and Mr. Charles W. Clark, of Fulton, entered for a 5 mile contest. As they were speeding along they were cheered by their many friends. Clark took the lead and held it through the contest he being the winner. Time 20 minutes 53 seconds.

Syracuse Standard: A letter received at Fulton from Middletown, N. Y. tells of a wonderful sight seen in the woods near that town last week. There came flock after flock of crows, numbering thousands, filling all the trees, almost darkening the air with their blackness. The concourse of their cries was a fearful one, drowning all other sounds. Men and boys repaired to the scene and spent the afternoon in firing into them, so that the morning after the "convention" the ground was thickly strewed with their dead bodies and with limbs broken from the trees by the weight of the birds perched on them. The surviving crows occupied several hours in moving away to the south, and were heard when miles away. What this unusual flight of crows [illegible]

Equal Rights to All.

This (Wednesday) evening, the Belva Lockwood Brigade will proceed to carminate this village. These young ladies being modest and unassuming would respectfully request that all the bold bad men wear blue glass spectacles thereby moderating their rude gaze. All the gentler sex unable to promenade with the "Amazons" are requested to illuminate their respective wigwams. The vast sum of $200,000 has been expended for fireworks and the dresses worn on this occasion will turn fashionable dressmakers green with envy. The line of march will be as follows: Forming in front of Nichols hall the stupendous column will move nearly due north about 15 rods, thence turning up Oneida street to Fourth street to the park, where will be exploded 7 tons of nitro-glycerine; thence back down Third street to Cayuga to First, to the roller skating rink where amid joyous laughter and pleasant music these elaborately robed damsels will disport and display themselves.

BY ORDER COM.

"Bee Hive" Opening.

The fall opening at the "Bee Hive" which occurred last week excels all others of previous years. Upon entering the store one was impressed with the splendor of the scene. From the walls on either side hung rich cloakings, plushes, and dress goods in brocaded silks and satins and other costly materials, paisley, woolen and fur shawls. The rear of the store was handsomely trimmed with lace bed spreads, blankets, felt goods etc. The cloak department has no equal in Northern New York. The "New Market" and "Prussian Circular" are the most graceful articles of apparel ever donned by the fairer sex. In the miscellaneous department is found laces, hosiery, gloves, edgings and hamburgs and Irish point laces, corsets, lace, linen and silk handkerchiefs, fancy goods etc., a most artistic display was made. The mattings, under wear for both ladies and gentlemen, and in fact every department is stocked with the latest and choicest goods. Much care and study was shown in the arrangement of the goods. The windows presented a picture for an artist. The firm and employees derserve much credit for their successful undertaking.

Narrow Escape.

John Haines and George Gore, two lads residing in Oswego Falls, one aged about twelve and the other fourteen, while playing on the bank opposite the upper quarry last Sunday, accidentally fell over the edge, rolling to the bottom, a distance of forty feet, and striking on the rocks below. Gore had one arm broken and was otherwise injured, while Haines received a severe cut on the head. Both boys were badly bruised. That they escaped with such slight injuries is indeed marvelous. They are both doing finely under the care of a physician.

The Syracuse Herald of yesterday says: James Printy of Fulton was found lying on a table in front of Andrews Brothers' grocery stores in James street at 1:30 a. m., to-day fast asleep. He was arrested and charged with intoxication. This morning he was discharged.

Many of our young people will regret to learn that Mr. George Harding, the popular manager of the Fulton roller skating rink has severed his connection with that concern. Mr. Harding has proved himself a capable manager and much of the success and popularity of the rink may be said to be the result of excellent supervision.

Friday Andrew Cunningham, well known in Oswego, but who has lived in the town of Scriba, near Copeland's mill, for some time, saw a boy named Frank Mallett carrying off a piece of board and took down his gun and fired at him. The charge struck Mallet in the face, tearing away his cheek. Cunningham has always been regarded as a "crank."

The Seymour—Stratton Theatre Company closed their engagement here last Saturday evening. Their stay at this place was not a great success financially although the company was pronounced by our citizens as superior to many shows of the kind which visit us. The lack of interest in such amusements this season is attributed to the great political excitement which demands the attention of so many people.

On Wednesday evening last at the residence of the bride's father, occurred the marriage of Miss Isadore Cornell, adopted daughter of A. F. Harmon, of this village, and Erwin G. Casey of Sheboygan, Wis. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. F. Markham. About forty invited guests were present and the happy couple were the recipients of many valuable presents. They will leave on an extended trip through the South the first of the month.

Friday night, John Mulligan, a Hannibal farmer, went to Oswego and put his horse up at Cooper's stable. He called late at night, but Cooper had gone home. Milligan was seen near the barn intoxicated, and an hour later, while some people were crossing the bridge over the river, they heard a splash and cries for help. Milligan has not been seen since, and it is supposed that he fell in and was drowned. His friends have grapled for the body.

[illegible] Safety and Speed Combined.

The New York, Ontario & Western road is bound not to be outdone by its rivals leading to the seashore, and has just announced great reductions in passenger rates. This is now a favorite route and at this season of the year is particularly inviting from the beautiful and picturesque landscape, the wild mountain scenery, the long expanse of hillside covered with the bright hues of autumn, the vast stretches of cultivated farms extending for miles over the rich valleys, and reaching far up to the mountain crest, all make a restful and inviting picture to look upon. At Cornwall that far-famed Hudson suddenly appears to view and the train winds along the banks of this classic river until the staid old Dutch burgh of Haverstraw is reached; rapid time is made, and the Pullman buffet coaches are always neat and confortable, while the attractions shown by conductors and attendants is what should be expected from a well managed road.

The double lock at Geddes is to be built for the State by Willard Johnson, of Fulton. It some years since the eccentric contractor has been seen in Syracuse as was his wont in the old days. Most of us remember the jolly face of the shrewd countryman set in an aureole of ruddy locks as roseate as a Spitzenberg apple. He always had a quip with which to entertain his friends while he whittled his pine sliver with a big jackknife. He was the animate allegory of Uncle Jonathan. The habit was as firmly fixed as opium eating gets to be. No matter what concern took him from his home, he would as soon think of setting out without the keen blade and soft stick, which were his inseparable companions, as of going without a change of linen. On the cars, at his work, in the hotels, he incessantly whittled as if life depended upon it. The habit was acquired, he once explained in my hearing, while trying to break himself from chewing tobacco. It is, in fact, an antidote for the weed.—[Syracuse Sunday Standard.

The Rome Sentinel says: Torchlight parades are all the go now, and much money is spent in procuring uniforms, torches and banners. In no campaign that I can remember has there been such elaborate and costly suits worn by parades. An agent for campaign outfits said to me in the early part of the season. "The demand this year is not for cheap uniforms, but for costly ones. We can not get them up good enough for these political companies. Heretofore our trade has been principally in capes and caps, but this year most of them seem to want coats, leggins, helmets, etc. But I tell you what it is, after all the fuss and expense, there is nothing that looks neater than the cap and cape uniform." In that opinion I freely concur with the agent. Of course, it is perhaps a good idea for a well drilled company to wear a continental or a zouave uniform, but well drilled companies are the exception, not the rule. A poorly drilled company only makes itself more conspicuous by wearing a costly uniform.

Dishonesty in Trade.

There is hardly an article of manufactured merchandise made or imported in the United States that has not its adulterations or imitations; and there are but few articles of raw material that are not in some manner adulterated. What is needed is a law that shall compel all men to do an honest business; a law that shall apply alike to the rich and the poor; a law that shall punish the man who sells with a false balance, the same as the man who steals a loaf of bread; a law that shall punish the man who makes and sells a counterfeit article of merchandise, the same as the man who makes and circulates a couterfeit coin. —[T. Training of Children.

As soon as your little lass can prattle and run about, teach her order cleanliness, neatness and economy. The second you can commence almost at birth. Buy her some toys—dolls, a house and cradle, if possible—supply her with a place to put them in, nor suffer any member of the family to disturb or appropriate that place. As soon as she is tired of her playthings make her carefully dust and stow them neatly away in their proper places. This will teach her order and punctuality. As she advances give her lessons in sewing and making garments for her dolls; also to make the curtains, carpets and upholstery for the chairs, sofas and ottomans, and arrange them properly, to keep the house clean and the doll's clothes also. By this you will lay the foundation of a good, sound, practical domestic education, and will soon discover all the elements of a well-ordered and regulated system, pervading every action and movement of our little pupil.—["Aunt Pattie," in London Letter.

"I think I know, pa."

"Well, what is it?"

"Why I saw in the dictionary that 'candied' meant 'preserved with sugar,' and I heard you say the other day that it would take lots of sugar to save the presidential candidates this year."

"That is probably right my son; the application is correct, anyway."—[Texas Siftings.

KENNEDY'S
REMEDY

For the Cure of Kidney and Liver Complaints, Constipation, and all disorders arising from an impure state of the BLOOD. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex it is an unfailing friend. All Druggists. One Dollar a bottle, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

FEARFULLY COMMON.

Kidney Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages.—A Brilliant Recovery.

There is something starting in the rapid increase of Kidney diseases among the American people within a few years past. Many cases peculiar to certain classes tend to produce and aggravate these troubles—as, for example, careless living, overwork, and exposure. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is often congratulated on the exceptional success of his medicine called FAVORITE REMEDY, in arresting and radically curing these most painful and dangerous disorders. Proofs of this, like the following, are constantly brought to his attention and are published by him for the sake of thousands of other sufferers whom he desires to reach and benefit. The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the fine and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place or business on the corner of Main and Union Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR, For ten years I have been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except those who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this precise sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others.

Yours, etc., LYMAN CRAWFORD.

BILIOUSNESS.

Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Act upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

How Watch Cases are Made.

In 1875, thirteen men comprised the entire working force used in the manufacture of the James Boss' Gold Watch Case. Now over five hundred are employed, and the number is constantly increasing. The reason of this increase is this: In the James Boss' Gold Watch Case all the metal in sight and subject to wear is solid gold, while the remainder, which only lends strength to the case, is of stronger metal than gold, giving gold where gold is needed, and strong, elastic metal where strength and elasticity are needed, a combination producing a watch case better than solid gold [illegible]

But flax [illegible] until frost.

The better the tilth the better the wheat.

Wheat and quack grass are near relatives.

Soak seed grain in strong brine to prevent smut.

Take recreation with fish-pole and gun sometimes.

Seed corn should be selected before the stalks are cut.

A little oil meal fed daily will help to keep up a full milk flow.

In bee robbing close the hives so that only one or two bees can enter at a time.

Have regard to morals in hired help; bad people may contaminate the children.

When hops have acquired a strong force and the seed is firm and brown, they are fit to gather.

Indigo was formerly cultivated as a field crop in the south, but is now superseded by the paying cotton crop.

Winter and Spring Grain—In both wheat and rye there are winter and spring varieties. The difference in these was brought about through cultivation, and is not so fixed but that it can be easily changed. By sowing the winter varieties continually later through successive generations, they will be transferred into spring sorts, and the opposite course would restore them again into winter grain.

Fattening Animals—It pays to commence a course of liberal feeding of these early, for much of the food needed later to keep up extra animal heat, now makes fat. If old corn is used it should be ground on the scheme of great economy. The immature corn and nubbin that come with harvesting will soon form an item in the feed and may be fed along with ground meal. The animals should continue to receive green food and the cull, parings, etc., from fruits will contribute.

A GREAT DISCOVERY.

Mr. Wm. Thomas of Newton, Ia., says "My wife has been seriously affected with a cough for twenty-five years, and this spring more severely than ever before. She had used many remedies without relief, and being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery, did so, with most gratifying results. The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years. 'Trial bottles free at R. E. Phillips' drug store. Large Size. $1.00

A Disapointment which was No Surprise.

"Oh, just look at those beautiful melons; they fairly make my mouth water!" she exclaimed.

"They are beauties," he replied. "Wouldn't it it be nice to take one home with us and put it on ice for a while, and then have it at supper?"

"Wouldn't it!"

"But," and he paused reflectively, "you know, though I don't believe it, they say melons are malarious. Don't you think we'd better stop on our way home and have a dish of ice cream with sponge cake?"

"Well, you know best, dear. Maybe it would be better," she placidly replies.

After they walk a few blocks in quiet contemplation of anticipated pleasure, she stops suddenly and says: "But, Alfred, I do believe we are two ninnies; why, there is no ice cream saloon on the way home."

"Ain't there?" he says, in faint surprise, and adds: "Well, it's really too bad, but it can't be helped now, pet" and there is a mild light of the unjust man made perfectly happy in his eyes as he says it.—[Atlanta Constitution.

ONE BOTTLE INSTEAD OF A DOZEN.

"And it took only one bottle to do it," said a gentleman, speaking of Parker's Hair Balsam. I had a run of fever, and when I got well of that, my hair began to fall out so fast as to alarm me. I really didn't know what to do, until one day a friend said, "Try Parker's Hair Balsam. That was some months ago. What surprised me was the fact that one bottle was enough. I expected to use up a dozen." Clean, highly perfumed, not oily, not a dye. Restores original color.

Next to the Latest.

"This is the latest agony in bonnets," she remarked to her husband as she tried its effect in the mirror.

"Is it paid for?" he asked.

"No: I had it charged."

"Well, it isn't the latest agony in bonnets then," he said with a groan.

The Faded Actress.

She sits in her chamber cold and bare,
Her dress well worn and faded;
Her form is spare, and weary air
On her features thin and jaded.

All things about her are poor and old,
The furniture scant and shabby;
Her hand lies cold on her dress's fold,
Caressed by an ancient tabby.

Not old is she, but no longer young—
She has passed the dreadful border
When the flattering tongue, and the garlands flung
On the stage no more reward her.

Do the crumbling wreaths on the chamber wall
Of her youthful days remind her?
Do the hot tears fall at the mournful call
Of a fairer life behind her?

Ah, what might the withered bouquet tell
O'er which her face is bended?
Does it hold a spell for the faded belle,
With the footlight memories blended?

Does it call to her heart some joyous night
When tumultuous bravos crowned her,
And she stood in the light of a triumph bright,
With her envious sisters round her?

Alas, for the garlands dry and gray
With which they had once bestrewn her—
'Tis the sole bouquet of the whole array—
She had not bought to be thrown her.

DEAF AND DUMB.

By Helen Forrest Graves.

It was mid-summer in the mountains, and Lilian Ferguson had never seen a fairer scene than the billows of blue hills that lay stretched out below her, with here and there the flash of a half hidden lake or the ribbon-like glitter of a tiny river.

She stood leaning against the rustic column that formed the support of the hotel piazza, while her modest little trunk and traveling bags were piled up at the rear.

"Don't fret, Miss," said the landlady, who was bustling in and out. "The stage will be along soon."

"Oh, I am in no hurry for the stage," said Lillian, pleasantly. "I could stand and look at this beautiful landscape all day."

"Ain't that strange, now?" reflectively uttered Mrs. Peck, the landlady. "Me and Peck, we never think about it at all."

"Is the stage often as late as this?" said Lilian, glancing at her neat little silver watch.

"Not generally," said Mrs. Peck. "But to-day they're waiting at Well's Station for the deaf and dumb gentlemen."

"For whom?" said Lilian, in amazement.

"For the deaf and dumb gentleman, Miss," explained Mrs. Peck. "A cousin of our minister's up at Crest Hill. He's been down to New York for treatment; but, deary me, there ain't no treatment can ever do him any good. As deaf as a stone, Miss and never spoke an intelligible word since he was born. But they do say he's a very learned man, in spite of all his drawbacks."

"I'm afraid he won't be a very lively traveling companion," said Lilian, smiling.

"No, I calculate not," said Mrs. Peck in a matter-of-fact sort of way.

Just at that moment a box-wagon drove up; the charioteer handed out a valise and assisted a young lady to alight.

"Has the stage gone?" she cried, flinging aside her veil and revealing a very pretty brunette face shaded by jetty fringes of hair and flushed with excitement.

"You're just in time, Miss," said Mrs. Peck, peering down the winding road, which her experienced eye could trace, when no one else's was of any avail. "It's a-comin now!"

But Lilian Ferguson, who had been gazing at the newcomer earnestly, now came forward with an eager smile and an outstretched hand.

"Surely I am not mistaken," said she, "and this is Eulalia Morton?"

"Lilian Ferguson! Oh, you darling, I am so glad to see you!" cried the stranger. "But where on earth did you come from?"

And thus met the two lovely girls who had graduated just a year ago from Madame De Tournaire's fashionable boarding school in New York and who had not seen each other since.

Up to this moment, however, there was no time for explanation. The ponderous stage, relic of a forgotten generation, rolled up, with creak of leathern curtains, tramp of horses and a general commotion of arrival, to the broad wood-[illegible] down. In the twilight [illegible] and Lilian could only discover that the stage contained but [illegible] soft pity. "The landlady told me about him."

"What a nuisance!" cried Eulalie, I had hoped we should have the stage to ourselves. But now, dear," as she settled herself in the most comfortable corner, "tell me what this unexpected encounter means."

"It means," said Lilian, with a shy smile, "that I am going to be nursery governess at Chessington Hall, up among the Adirondacks—that is, if I give satisfaction. I was engaged by letter from the Educational Bureau a week ago."

"What a very singular coincidence!" said Miss Morton, shaking her cherry-colored bonnet strings. "And I am going to be companion to old Mrs. Grove of Grove Rookery, the very next place to Chessington Hall. "How I do envy you, Lilian!"

"Envy me, Eulalie?"

"Yes, Haven't you heard about it?" said the brunette. "The Chessington children, your future charges, are motherless, don't you know? They are under the care of an aunt, so Mrs. Grove told me; and there is a handsome widower and interesting young bachelor at Chessington Hall."

Lillian colored, hotly,

"Neither of whom I ever expect to meet," said she.

"It will be your own fault if you don't," observed Miss Morton. "Why, my dear, here is your career all chalked out for you. Sentimental widower, with lots of money—pretty governess—mutual fascination—growing devotion—finale, a wedding! Hey! presto, your fortune is made!"

"Eulalie, how can you talk so?" cried Lilian, indignant. "I am not on a husband-hunting expedition; I am simply trying to earn my own living."

"The more goose you, to neglect such an opportunity as this," said Eulalia, laughing. "If you don't try for the widower I shall. Grove Rookery is only half a mile from Chessington Hall, after all; and a rich husband would solve the problem of my life at once."

"This is too ridiculous, Eulalie," said Lilian. "I could not respect myself if I were to plot and plan like this. I know it is unjust, but you have made me dislike Mr. Chessington already.

"The more the better," said Miss Morton. "There will be all the better chance for me. They say he is very handsome; and one could easily send the two children away to boarding school. I can assure you I'll have no old maids, aunts and interfering uncles about the premises."

"Eulalie, let us talk of something else," said Lilian, resolutely. "Tell me all that has happened to you since graduation day."

Eulalie laughed out a merry, ringing laugh.

"Well, if you must know," she said, "I've been trying my best to get a nice husband, but without any success."

"Is matrimony, then, the end and aim of all the world?" said Lilian, with queenly disdain.

"As far as I am concerned—yes," acknowledged Miss Morton, with charming frankness.

"Pardon me, Eulalie," said Lilian, but it seems to me that you have degenerated frightfully since those dear old days at Madame de Tournaire's."

Miss Morton yawned.

"How tedious all this is!" said she. "Miss Ferguson turned lecturer, 'eh? How I wish that poor fellow in the corner wasn't deaf-and-dumb! I'd flirt with him, just to aggravate you, Lily!"

Lilian made no answer. She leaned her head out of the stage window, and watched the purple dusk creep up the mountain sides, counting the stars as one by one they shone out. Anything was better than Eulalie's shallow clatter.

Grove Rookery was soon reached, and Miss Morton bade her old schoolmate an effusive farewell.

"I see that the old lady has sent the carriage to meet me," said she. "Good-by. Lily! You must be sure to introduce me to the charming widower when I come over. Au revoir, darling—au revoir!"

The deaf and dumb gentleman left the stage very soon. Miss Ferguson watched with some interest, but no carriage of any description seemed to be waiting for him.

He disappeared into the woods like a shadow, and vanished from her sight.

"I suppose, poor fellow, that he lives near here," thought she. How dreadful it must be thus to be cut off from all companionship with one's fellow beings!'

But even while these reflections passed through her mind, the stage stopped again before a glittering façade of lights half veiled in swaying summer foliage—Chessington Hall!

"Here you are, Miss," said the driver.

"Through the summer evening dusk, Lilian could see the marble-railed terrace and the broad carriage drive, while two childish figures danced up and down and uttered joyful exclamations of welcome—little Blanch and Alice Chessington!

"Are you the new governess?" said they. Are you Miss Ferguson? Welcome—welcome to the Adirondacks! We are so glad that you have come!"

And in an instant their arms were twined around Lilian's neck.

At the end of a month Lilian Ferguson felt completely and thoroughly at home with her new pupils.

They had ranged the woods, and visited all the grottoes and cascades; they had surrounded her with an atmosphere of the sweetest affection.

Mrs. Hartleigh, their aunt, was equally kind; and Alfred Hartleigh, the interesting young uncle, had already taken her into his confidence as to the beautiful bride he was going to bring home [illegible]

Eulalie Morton, who had driven over in the Grove Rookery carriage to call, a tall, handsome gentleman entered the room with Mrs. Hartleigh on his arm.

"The deaf and dumb gentleman!" Lilian involuntarily exclaimed.

"Poor fellow, so it is!" said Miss Morton, who advanced airily, shaking out the light muslin flounces of her dress. "How he does haunt us, to be sure!"

"Ladies," said the deaf-and-dumb gentleman, "you are mistaken. I can hear and speak to-day as well as anybody. I should have spoken to you a month ago in the stage-coach if it had not been for the unfortunate circumstance of my having been to the dentist and had my lower jaw broken in the extraction of a double tooth. I perceive that you were mistaking me for my unfortunate friend, Mr. Denton, a deaf mute who lives near here; but he had been detained until the next day; and with my bandaged jaw it was impossible for me to speak and explain matters."

Eulalie Morton's face glowed scarlet. She literally knew what to say. But Lilian Ferguson stood calm and unmoved.

"Then," she said, smiling, "all our sympathy was thrown away upon you."

He inclined his head.

"Exactly," he said. I found the next day that it was necessary to put myself under the care of an Albany surgeon, so that I have been a sort of exile for a few weeks. Pardon my being so late to welcome you to Chessington Hall. But the welcome is none the less warm because it is tardy."

Eulalie Morton never came to Chessington Hall again, nor could she so much as think of her conversation in the stage that night without hot indignation at herself.

"What a fool I was?" she cried.

Mr. Chessington, however, much as he liked and admired Lillian Ferguson, never asked her to marry him.

"When I was widowed once it was forever," he said.

And Lilian never coveted the prize of his heart perhaps because she was engaged to a rising young clergyman, near Philadelphia.

"If only I had Lily's opportunities?" said Miss Morton. "But I wrecked my chances when I spoke out my mind so freely before the deaf-and-dumb gentleman!"

That weak back or pain in the side or hips you will find immediately relieved when a Hop Plaster is applied. It strengthens the muscles, giving the ability to do hard work without suffering. Take none but this, 'tis sure.

Increased Duration of Life.

The stage to which we have at present attained may be stated thus: Compared with the period 1838–1854 (the earliest for which there are trustworthy records) the average of a man's life is now 41.9 years, an addition of 8 per cent. to the female life, and five per cent. to the male. Of each thousand males born in the present day, forty-four more will attain the age of 35 than used to be the case previous to 1871. For the whole of life the estimate now is that of one thousand persons (one half males and one half females) 35 survive at the age of 45, 26 at fifty-five, 9 at sixty-five, and one at 85. To put the case another way, every thousand persons born since 1870 will live about 2,700 years longer than before. In other words the life of 1000 persons is now equal in duration to that of 1,070 persons previously; and 1000 births will now keep up the growth of our population as well as 1070 births used to do. This is equivalent in result to an increase of our population, and in the best form, viz: not by more births but by fewer deaths, which mean fewer maladies and better health. What is more, nearly 70 per cent. of this increase of life takes place (or is lived) in the 'useful period'—namely, between the ages of twenty and sixty. Thus of the 2700 additional years lived by each thousand of our population, 70 per cent. or 1,890 years, will be a direct addition to the working power of our people.

It is to be remembered that there might be a great addition to the births in the country with little addition to the national working power—nay, with an actual reduction of the national wealth and prosperity—seeing that, regarded as 'economic agents,' children are simply a source of expense, and so also are a majority of the elderly who have passed the age of three score. On the other hand as already said, only one quarter of the longer or additional life now enjoyed by our people is passed in the useless periods of childhood and old age, and more than one-third of it is lived at ages when life is at its highest vigor, and most productive of wealth and enjoyment.—[Cornhill Magazine.

ONE BOTTLE INSTEAD OF A DOZEN.

"And it took only one bottle to do it," said a gentleman, speaking of Parker's Hair Balsam. I had a run of fever, and when I got well of that, my hair began to fall out so fast as to alarm me. I really didn't know what to do, until one day a friend said, "Try Parker's Hair Balsam. That was some months ago. What surprised me was the fact that one bottle was enough. I expected to use up a dozen." Clean, highly perfumed, not oily, not a dye. Restores original color.

A young lady who was blamed for allowing her glove to be discovered in a young man's pocket stated that she had no hand in it.

Satin remains in favor for full dress toilettes.

[illegible] laces are much used on evening dresses.

Much [illegible] lace is used in both real and imitation.

Black Astrakhan borders are much used on black wool dresses.

Cashmere or velvet bonnets are worn by girls of two years and upward.

Black poplin with red or golden brown satin stripes are used for street dresses.

Velveteen skirts are [illegible] in front and fall in wide kilt pleats behind.

Deep lace collars and cuffs are worn in preference to those of embroidery for children.

Elegant black costumes are made of the heavily repped yet soft silks, that resemble Irish poplin.

A novelty in black wool dresses for the street is the use of rough, hard bicloth, trimmed with black worsted lace.

Sleeves are still slightly gathered into the arm holes; but they do not stand up quite as high as they did.

The newest embroidered black net for plastrons and skirt fronts, have the figures wrought in gold threads.

The colored wool lace for trimming camel's hair and bison cloth dresses come in Guipure and Smyrna designs, and are known as Angora lace.

A quaint fashion for the house is to wear an inch broad band of black velvet tight about the ankle. When worn against an old gold or crimson stockings the effect it quite pretty.

High crowned hats are very popular, and those of felt are sometimes made quite unique with to the crown ornamented with briding of a heavy silk cord of the same color as the hat.

Walking coats for small girls or boys from three to five years old are made of plaid or striped cloths or flannel in quint dull colors, with pleated back and front, a pointed hood lined with gay silk.

Whatever fashion may decree, a medium size waist, pretty shoulders, with the arm hole placed high enough to show the bust to advantage, but not gathered up into a balloon on the shoulders, will always be and look the perfection of a figure.

On the other hand, the production of Kidney-Wort began with wise cautions and scientific research, and its use ends in restoring shattered constitutions and endowing men and women with health and happiness. "My tormented back," is the exclamation of more than one poor hard-working man and woman; do you know why it aches? It is because your kidneys are overtasked and need strengthening, and your system needs to be cleansed of bad humors, You need Kidney-Wort.

Suppose the [illegible] lected. Why does our country persist in refusing the services of able, heroic, self-sacrificing men? Why not elect the juryman? In Arkansaw, hundreds of good fathers and brave plow-boys, almost free from the [illegible] of an evil eye, are at last found and given a taste of public life by being compelled to serve for a short time in the case of State vs. Jackson—charge of hog stealing. Do they go back to the brookside where the bobolink twitters in delight at seeing the partridge hop through a crack of the wheat field fence and dip up shining globules of water from the silvery stream? Yes, they go back, but are they contented? No. The father talks about law as he lazily smokes his cob pipe, and the son, while driving the team, names one of the horses Vs. and the other one State. The peaceful farm has lost its charms. The old fellow and the youngster crave public life. They want to sit in the court house and hear the lawyers talk, Such a fate. After a time of repining, unable longer to endure the removal from stirring scenes, no longer hearing those thrilling words, "and you, gentlemen of the jury," they throw aside the rude tools of toil, and go to town. The lawyer who was so polite to them once, now merely nods his head. They have, indeed, fallen, and a loss of importance ever suggests its recovery. They speak to some man who acquainted with the lines—knows the ropes and ask his advice. He tells them he will restore them to the posession of their lost estate. Again they hear the thrilling words, and you, gentlemen of the jury," and again the state is vs. some fellow who lifted a hog from his tranquil pen. Ah, the importance is entrancing. He has never enjoyed the reputation of being a smart man. He has always felt this great lack, but while smart men talk to him and look into his eyes as they say. "and you, gentlemen of the jury," he feels that the dark rim of life was indeed turned toward him in the past, but now, oh, yes, now, he will show Jerry Jones and Miles Spillers and Jake Anderson and Billy Jackson and the rest of them that after all, even though he "didn't have no schoolin'," the smart men of the country respect his judgment and are willing to submit a serious question to him. When he returns home, the place is more dreary than ever. The lowing cattle, the squealing pigs and cackling chickens are not to him causes for enjoyment. He wants to be in the court house. The dog makes an aggravated assault on the young heifer and—well, everything in law. When the next term of court arrives he goes to town and hangs around. the lawyer by this time knows him and cultivates him for they don't know but he can serve them a good turn. He is summoned and when asked if he has any excuse, he says that he has none. More and more does he become infatuated. He knows not that he is becoming despised by honest people. Despised, why? Because he is willing to serve his country? Humph! Another step and he is known as a professional juryman. The deputy sheriff passes him unheeded and summons a business man who storms and swears and wishes that the entire judiciary system was in the unreclaimed swamp lands. The poor aspirant and his lofty-minded son are compelled to go home without having served. "Never mind," says the old man, "we will have better luck next time. We gave satisfaction before and they'll soon want us again. They can't get along without them when they have an important case." Though he speaks assuredly, yet a dread has settled around his heart. Promptly when court is called the first morning of the next session, he makes his appearance but the deputy sheriff passes him and nabs a business man. This disappointment is too much, and we dislike to leave him in this condition, but, gentle reader—Sunday school patron—eternal truth must be written. He goes home drunk. Now, why educate a man to serve his country and then topple him, like the Column Vendome, from his pedestal of greatness? Shame, sir, it is a shame. Let the jury system go. Let it go to—oblivion.—[Arkansaw Traveler.

JOHN A. McKAY - - EDITOR

This paper has to-day changed hands. Announcement next week.

Address communications to FULTON TIMES, JOHN A. McKAY & Co., Proprietors.

GEN. SHERMAN, when introduced at a meeting of a Grand Army Post in St. Louis the other day, objected to the use of his title in such a gathering, saying that in the company of carriage makers and druggists he did not mind being called General, but when with soldiers he must insist on being a private and comrade.

THE Utica Morning Herald came to us last Saturday morning in a new dress of type, and enlarged to an eight paged paper, thus presenting a fine appearance. The Herald is the first moning paper that reaches Fulton, and is read by many, as well it might, for we find it one of the best morning papers in the State. The Herald is soon to be printed on one of Hoe's fast web perfecting presses. Long live the Herald.

EVERY Presidential election which has taken place since 1856, has been marked by a greater or less interruption of the ordinary business pursuits of the country. This result has been due chiefly to the fact that questions involving in the highest degree the welfare and prosperity of the nation have, in each successive canvass, arisen for decision at the polls; but never before in the history of the country has anything been witnessed comparable to the paralysis of business which now exists.—[New York Sun.

MR. BIBBERO, who linked his fame with that of Niagara some time ago by the announcement of his intent to perform certain perilous feats in its waters, which he wisely abstained from attempting, is now about to arrive on our shores, with the renewed purpose of swimming the Whirlpool Rapids. Ever since the death of poor Webb's devices for shooting Niagara have been numerous and ingenious, but, fortunately for the inventors, have not been put in practice. Boats, spheres of India rubber, and balloons have been among the aids proposed for the utterly useless and idiotic project of going down the falls. One man made bustling preparations to glide over them with a strong umbrella or parachute fastened to his shoulders; another, and the latest scheme, was that of a Buffalo fresco painter, who proposed to be washed down the cataract in a rubber globe—but he still lives to fresco. For the equally senseless project of swimming the rapids protective gutta percha armor and other devices have been suggested. Webb's fate should be a warning to Bibbero not to take gymnastic liberties with the merciless torrent.

Writing for the Press.

Write upon both sides of the leaf. As it is often necessary to cut the leaves into takes for the compositors, it can be so much more easily done than when written upon one side only.

Write in a confused and indistinct manner, paying little attention to the correctness of proper names or words in foreign languages. The editor and compositor always have plenty of spare time to unravel such enigmas.

Write in as diminutive hand as possible. Compositors have a remarkable range of vision, and have been known to catch a wink clear across the street from a saloon.

Begin at the very top of the first page. If you have written no heading for your article of course the editor will not desire to do so; if you have, he certainly will never desire to change it. If he has any instructions for the printer, regarding the size of type to be used, or the manner of display, or where the proof is to be sent, there certainly is room to write it across the face of the copy.

Roll your manuscript close and tight. This pleases every one, and causes expressions of emotional bliss to be uttered by editor, compositor, and proof-reader.

Let your article be long. Who wants to read a paltry, short effusion? Do not be accused of imitating Macaulay.

Never sign your name and address at the close of your letter. The editor does not care to know who you are, as he has implicit faith in you, and requires no guarantee whatever.

When the copy is set up, send for it and make all the corrections and alterations possible.

Be not be in any hurry to return proofs sent to you. If the office has not sufficient type to keep your matter standing a month or two, let them order additional material from the nearest type foundry.

Newspaper Decisions.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office—whether directed to his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the post office, or removing or leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

The Presbyterians of this State are endeavoring to raise $500,000 as an endowment fund for Hamilton College, with the understanding that if they succeeded they are to have control of that institution. Up to the 1st of July last they had paid $57,779 into the treasury of the college, and the Synod has urged that the churches and private individuals contribute liberally to the fund during the present synodical year.

President White delivered his annual address before the students of Cornell university Friday. The extension of the river piers into Lake Ontario at Charlotte, the port of Rochester, has not worked to the undivided advantage of shipping. The action of the water deposits mud and sand on the river bottom, especially at sides, from the old light house up to the steamboat landing, so that vessels drawing more than seven feet of water cannot get up to the wharves to unload or even for protection from the weather.

COUNTY COMMENTS.

From Our Exchanges.

Charles F. Manley, indicted for attempted rape, escaped from the Oswego jail two years ago. He has been arrested in the moutains of Pennsylvania and will be returned to Oswego.

AMMONIA IN BAKING POWDERS.

Scientific American.

Among the recent discoveries in science and chemistry, none is more important than the uses to which common ammonia can be properly put as a leavening agent, and which indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food.

The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power over soda and cream of tartar used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter, and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residium whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have been quick to avail themselves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of ammonia, combined, of course, with other leavening material.

Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. If, as seems to be justly claimed for it, the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking results in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, biscuit, and cake, it will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity, and will speedily force itself into general use in the new field to which science has assigned it.

What Our Exchanges Say.

The Standard welcomes to the journalistic field the gentlemen who have recently purchased the FULTON TIMES, a newspaper which has its home in a community which never fails to support with heartiness an enterprise that merits success, and that aims to serve the public. Issued in one of the liveliest and most thrifty of American towns, the TIMES has a field which will not allow a wide-awake newspaper to go begging; and this is the style of journalism which, we are informed, our Fulton friends propose to undertake. The Standard wishes the proprietors of the TIMES success beyond their expectations.—[Syracuse Standard.

The Fulton correspondent of the Syracuse Standard writes that paper that John A. McKay, who for the last year has been the editor yesterday morning became the owner of the FULTON TIMES. Mr. McKay is a young man, and has shown marked ability in his management of the columns of the TIMES since they have been under his control. That his venture in becoming proprietor of that journal will prove a successful one, we have no doubt, and to that end he has our best wishes.—[Oswego Times.

John A. McKay, who for the last year has been the editor, this morning became owner of the FULTON TIMES. We understand the new management has the means to make this live paper still more readable. The TIMES was founded by George E. Williams, sixteen years ago, and conducted as an independent newspaper. It has changed hands a number of times, never gaining any strength in a literary point of view. It will now make no attempt to supplant any of its weekly rivals, or fill the place of the city daily press, but will strive to give all the local news, and advance the best interests of its own village. Success to the TIMES.—[Fulton correspondent to the Standard.

[illegible] Utica market is now sold down to somewhere near the 12th of October. There seems to be about as much offering as usual, and it is claimed that in the northern part of the state there is a considerable quantity yet to come forward. Quite an amount of the stock taken to-day, and nearly all of that which brought the higher prices, was sold to the home trade.

Transactions were as follows: 300 boxes, 4 lots, at 11c.; 34 lots, 3,298 boxes, at 11¼c.; 8 lots, 990 boxes, at 11⅜c.; 8 lots, 655 boxes, at 11½c.; 2 lots, 290 boxes, at 11⅝c.; 3 lots, 300 boxes, at 11¾c.; 3 lots, 260 boxes, at 11⅞c; 3 lots small cheese, 200 boxes, at 12c.; and 4 lots, 396 boxes, at private terms. Sales 5,847 boxes; commissions, 574; total 6,421 boxes. Ruling price, 11¼c. Transactions of corresponding day last year, 5,877 boxes, 11c., ruling; of year before last, 6,324 boxes, 11¾c. ruling.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

CHEESE.—Nobody here takes any interest in cheese to-day and it was hard to find anything to call a market. Politics is the all-absorbing question and buyers and salesmen are alike indifferent on the subject of the cheese market. Sales are the lightest we have had yet this season. It is generally admitted that there is no material change in the situation and that the best goods would secure last week's prices were it not that the market is so broken up by the election. Salesmen refused to sell at less than prices paid here a week ago. The amount of cheese yet to go forward from here is very light, we believe much lighter than usual at this date. The few sales made to-day day are:

Lots	Boxes	Price
4	165	11¾
1	53	p. t.
5	300	com.

FARM DAIRIES.—There was quite a trade upon our forenoon market. Seven hundred and thirty-four boxes were disposed of at prices ranging from 11½c. to 12c. There were four or five lots of the latter figure, and most of the balance sold at 11¾c.

BUTTER.—There were sales of 90 packages farm dairy butter at 22 to 27c. The bulk sold at 26 to 27c.

AT FULTON.

At the cheese market Monday night there was fifteen factories represented with 1200 boxes of cheese of which about 600 boxes were sold at 11¼c., Utica ruling.

THE CENTURY.

In 1885.

A GREAT ENTERPRISE.

Papers on The Civil War.

The important features of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE for the coming year—indeed, perhaps the most important ever before undertaken by the magazine will be a series of separate papers on the great battles of the War of the Union, written by general officers high in command upon both the Federal and Confederate sides,—General Grant (who writes of Vicksburg, Shiloh, and other battles), Generals Longstreet, McClellan, Beauregard, Rosecrans, Hill, Admiral Porter and others. The series opens in the November Century with a graphically illustrated article on the written by the Confederate general, G. T. Beauregard. Brief sketches entitled "Recollections of a Private," papers chronicling special events, descriptions of various auxilliary branches of the service, etc., will supplement the more important series by the various generals.

A strict regard for accuracy will guide the preparation of the illustrations, for which the CENTURY has at its disposal a very large quantity of photographs, drawings, portraits, maps, plans, etc, hitherto unused. The aim is to present in this series, not official reports, but commanding officers' accounts of their plans and operations,—interesting personal experience which will record leading events of the war, and possess at the same time, a historical value not easily calculated.

Fiction.

In this line the CENTURY will maintain its prestige, and furnish the best stories of American writers that can be procured. In November begins

A NEW NOVEL, BY W. D. HOWELLS

Author of "Venetian Days," "A Modern Instance," etc. This story deals with the rise of an American business men. A novel by Henry James, a novellette by Grace Denio Litchfield, and short stories by "Uncle Remus;" Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyeson, T. A. Jauier, H. H., Sullan Hawthorne, and other equally well known writers will appear at various times.

Miscellaneous Featuresi

Under this heading may be included a series of paperf on the Cities of Italy by W. D. Howells, the illustrations being reproductions of etchings anp drawings by Joseph Pennell; a series on the first being by Proffesor Langley and others. Under architecture are included more of Mrs. VanRennselaers articles on Churches, City and Country Houses, etc. Colonel George E. Waring, jr. will describe

ASTRONOMY, ARCHITECTURE and HISTOPY

PROGRESS IN SANITARY DRAINING;

E. C. Stedman, Edmund Gosse, and others will furnish literary essays; George W. Cable will contribute in various ways; several papees on sport and adventure will sooh be published, and will write from time to time on outdoor subject.

Readers of THE CENTURY may feel sure of keeping abreast of the times on leading subjects that may properly come within the province of a monthly magazins. Its circulation is now about 140,000 monthly, the November number exceeding that figure. Subscriptions should date from this number beginning the War Series and Mr. Howells' novel. Price $4.00 a year, 35 cents a number. All booksellers and Newsdealers sell it and take subscriptions, or remittance may be made to the publishers.

[illegible]

The knowing [illegible] in Fulton are just now telling a story implicating a young Syracusan. Inquiry among interested parties in Syracuse confirms the facts as narrated in the neighboring hamlet, and the young man declines to make any statement in the matter.

William, better known as "Will" Farmer, has been employed as a telegraph operator in Syracuse for several years, usually in stock brokers' offices, and of late has held similar positions in Canastota and Little Falls. Farmer is a bright and pleasant-spoken fellow, nineteen years of age. His family live in South Salina street. Two or three months ago Farmer was sent to Fulton to take charge of the branch office there of Babcock & Andrews, stock brokers, of this city. About three-fourths of the business he did there was entered in his accounts, in the names of two young men living in the village, one of them a telegrapher, the other a baker. Their names were Wood and Lasher. The truth of the matter seems to have been that the deals were all Farmer's own, but the advantages derived therefrom were divided with Lasher and Wood for the use of their names. It is a rule of Babcock & Andrews that their employees in such capacity shall not tamper with the market. Some time ago Wood and Lasher left Fulton, under circumstances which excited comment. Thereafter it was impossible for Farmer to enter transactions in their name, so he made use of an initial. Two weeks ago last Thursday, Farmer, under this initial made a buying trade in "Northwest," and the stock fell. On the following day, he made a large trade, hoping by its profits to cover the deficit of the previous day's deal. Again the stock went down, and Farmer was out. On Saturday, say the gossips, he increased his deal again and in the same direction, hoping that the stock would react. It did not, but again went down. On Saturday afternoon he should have made his deposits with the main house. When inquiry was made by telegraph, he responded that he had deposited $200. After the board closed that day he hired a rig from a Fulton liveryman and went to Oswego, sending the rig back on Sunday by a boy he had taken with him. He went on to Buffalo. One of Babcock & Andrews' agents from Syracuse went to Fulton on Monday, as word was received that the office there was vacant. It was discovered that $200 due the firm was missing. A check for $200, which had been drawn by some customer payable to Babcock & Andrews, on a Syracuse bank, was left in the drawer. Farmer came back to Syracuse shortly after his exit from Fulton, and went into the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Company. He was found at their office this morning, but said he didn't want to say anything on the subject. Messrs. Babcock & Andrews were uncommunicative, only vouchsafing brief replies, but confirming the facts of the story. They said they should do nothing about the matter, as the only satisfaction they could get would be to imprison Farmer, and that they didn't care to do.—[Syracuse Journal.

Wishes to Relieve Her "Feelins."

To the editor of the TIMES:

I never wrote a letter before for a paper, but the parade that occurred last week makes me so indignant that I must utter a protest to the scandelous doins that happened last Wednesday night, in order to relieve my feelins. Last Tuesday I read a hanbill that said the supporters of Belva Lockwood would have a torchlight percession. I might a knowd better because Belva supports herself by bein a lawyer. Accordinly me and my friend who lives next door, fixed ourselves up and went down town to see em. We waited pashently for the percession to start for a long time, but we lowed they was fixin their torches an things, but when they did come out and we seen what they was we was bilin. They wasn't no wimmin about em. They was nothin but men an boys, some younger and some older—dressed up in their ma's close. How they ever come to git em is moren I kin imagine. Any woman who could incourage such perceedins as I saw that night, I hev got my pinion of her. They mostly had Mother hubberds on, some of em perty costly too, I guess—specially the captains. They marched all round town, up to the public square an back, and me and my friend follered em round till they went into the skatin rink, where my daughter said they acted redicklus in the extreme.

Now Mr. editer, I think them fellers ought to be shamed of themselves. How would they like to see their mothers and sisters and other lady friends marchin round with men's close on? I for one think it is a shame. Hopin you will find room for this in your paper—I don't want to sine my name, so I sine, INDIGNANT WOMAN.

South Carolina Marriage Scheme.

At a recent wedding reception in South Carolina a young lawyer begged leave to offer a new scheme of matrimony, which he believed would be beneficial. He proposed that "one man in the company should be selected as President; that this President should be duly sworn to keep entirely secret all communications that should be forwarded to him in his official department that night, and that each unmarried gentleman and lady should write his or her name on a piece of paper and under the name of the person they wished to marry, then hand it to the President for inspection, and if any gentleman and lady had reciprocally chosen each other the President was to inform each of the result, and those who had not been reciprocal in their choice kept entirely secret." After the appointment of the President communications were accordingly handed up to the chair, and it was found that 12 young ladies and gentlemen had made reciprocal choices, but whom they had chosen remained a secret to all but themselves and the President. I was passing through the same place a few days ago, and was informed that [illegible]

Now comes Thanksgiving.

Does the election news please you?

Thanksgiving day will occur this month.

The cabbage crop east of this village is very large this year.

Communion Services at the M. E. church next Sunday, with Love Feast and Sacrament in the evening.

The Rev. Mr. Barnes of Brooklyn, will occupy the pulpit at the Universalist church next Sunday evening.

Assist the Carthage sufferers if you can. Subscriptions taken at the First National bank and promptly forwarded.

We were in error last week in speaking of the party given Miss Carrie Nichols. It should have read at the residence of C. R. Nichols on First street.

Farmers, if a traveling gentleman asks you to sign a petition asking for a reduction in general taxes, look with suspicion upon him. You may find the "petition" coming back to you in the shape of a promissory note. This dodge is now being played.

Hand bills were thrown about yesterday stating that a reward of $50. would be paid for evidence which would secure conviction for the violation of the law as applied to the selling of intoxicating liquors on election day. It was signed by the Executive Com. Law and Order League.

The Presbyterian society are becoming considerably interested in Prof. A. G. Hopkins, of Hamilton college, who is now temporarily occupying that pulpit. Mr. Hopkins has preached several able and effective sermons which have been listened to with marked interest by large congregations.

The Blaine and Logan Glee club which have furnished such excellent campaign music for the people of this town and Oswego, under the leadership of Postmaster Gilbert will not disorganize but will go into practice and will furnish our people with some choice vocal music the coming winter.

Prof. George A. Cook, known as "Happy George," of Rochester, has established headquarters in the store under Gomon's barber shop, where he will remain for a fortnight with his twenty-four Circassian girls, and will give a free exhibition every afternoon and evening. Prizes will be given away at every performance. Everybody come.

The Rev. J. C. Breaker preached his first sermon as pastor of the Baptist church of this village last Sunday morning to an unusually large congregation. Mr. Breaker has a very pleasing address and throws his whole soul into his sermon. He was very favorably received. Rev. Mr. Dow, the former pastor, preached one of his able sermons in the evening.

Oswego Falls Observer: A young man of this place is said to have been "mashed" on a young lady living on First street, and before he had hardly made her acquaintance purchased for her a pair of shoes, a shawl and some other articles. His sister thinking him very foolish went to the young lady and demanded and got possession of the articles, but now thinks he has trouble "Mor-in" he can bear.

Mr. H. Howard, proprietor of the opera house at Baldwinsville, has leased the Stephens opera house at Fulton, to open which, he is negotiating with the Philharmonics. The opening will probably take place about Thanksgiving, upon which day the society will give the "Chimes" at Oswego. The popularity and merit of the Philharmonic performance will undoubtedly make the opening a great success.—[Syracuse Times.

The affairs of the Universalist society of this place are presenting a much brighter side than they have for some time past. The membership of the church at present numbers about seventy-five. We are glad to say that there is a prospect of the society's engaging a pastor for the coming. It is to be hoped that all the pulpits of our village will be supplied with preachers before winter really commences.

As Michael Gleason, a farmer at Mexico, aged 65, and William McCarthy, were returning from Palermo a few days ago, the seat of the wagon gave way, and both fell backward to the ground. McCarthy was stunned and remained insensible for some time. Recovering, he found Gleason with his head between the box and one of the rear wheels, crowded between the spokes, and the step sticking into his side. He died in a few minutes after being taken home.

The Democratic parade in this village last Thursday evening was a grand success. About five hundred men were in line. Oswego was well represented with about two hundred men, most of them wearing black plug hats. The Illuminations of the Bee Hive and F. E. Bacon's stores and many other business places and private residences were gorgeous. The Fulton clubs went to Oswego Friday night, and joined the Democracy of the city in one of the greatest Democratic demonstrations ever held in the county. They were led by the Hannibal band.

Obituary.

Died at Rochester, N. Y., on Wednesday, Oct. 21, 1883, Ida Waffle, wife of Edgar A. Coapman, aged 24 years. The deceased was once a resident of this village and here obtained her education. She has many warm friends hereabouts who will mourn her loss. The funeral occurred Friday, Oct. 24, from her home at No. 63 Bolivar street, Rochester. Rev. [illegible] officiated. [illegible] at Mt. Hope [illegible]

The Lockwood Brigade.

The Belva Lockwood Brigade composed of [illegible] hundred young men last Wednesday evening, was a very amusing sight. The large crowd that witnessed them as they marched through the streets headed by the band were convulsed with laughter at the ludicrous costumes which these burlesquers wore. The larger portion of the procession appeared in the much abused Mother Hubbard, in bright colors. They carried many banners and a fine portrait of Belva. The display of fireworks was immense. About five hundred people assembled at the rink to watch the "awful girls" skate. It was really amusing to listen to the unfavorable comments made upon the brigade by young ladies who at the same time persisted in following the procession on a run, while others were heard to make the remark that if any lady would make a good president Belva Lockwood.

Matrimonial.

As we go to press we learn of the marriage of Adolphus Bennett, of Washington D. C., and Miss Kate M. Flint of this village. The ceremony was performed at the residence of H. C. Beals, by Rev. W. F. Markham. The TIMES extends congratulations.

Starting a Newspaper.

In a recent sermon Mr. Talmage said: "On the theory that any body can make a newspaper, inexperienced capitalists every year are entering the lists, and it is a simple statistic that there is an average of dead newspapers every day in the year. The average of the newspaper life is five years. Most of them die of cholera infantum. It is high time it were understood that the most successful way of sinking a fortune and keeping it sunk is to start a newspaper. Almost every intelligent man during his life is smitten with newspaper mania; start a newspaper, or have stock in one, he must or die. But, let me tell you, oh, man, that if you have an idea or any moral, social, political or religious subject, you had better charge the columns already established. Do not take the idea so prevalent that when a man can do nothing else he can edit a newspaper. To man and propel a newspaper, take it for granted you are threatened with softening of the brain."

Fulton Democracy in Oswego.

The Democratic clubs of this village and Oswego Falls went to Oswege Friday evening last to take part in the grand parade there. The Oswego Times says of them: After the head of the procession passed the bridge the hearts of the marchers were gladened by the sight of the Fulton contingent, consisting of about 250 men, with the Brewster band, who formed by far the finest portion of the procession.

The Palladium says: The Fulton clubs are a fine looking body of men and made an excellent showing. Their banners are the handsomest carried by either democrats or republicans this fall, and the club received many compliments along the line.

Teachers' Institute.

A Teachers Institute for the County of Oswego, conducted by Prof. Johnnot and French, will be held at the church, Parish, N. Y., commencing Monday, November 24th, 1884, and continue one week.

TEACHERS! There is an increasing demand from school officers for instructors who have become proficient in the modern methods of teaching, and, as the main object of the institute is to give the teacher a more extended knowledge of those methods, and, as past experience convinces us that your ability to instruct the little ones is greatly strengthened by the institute work, we expect that every teacher in the county of Oswego will improve this opportunity and be present during the entire session. The time spent by the teacher in attendance at the institute, will be credited to the district the same as time taught.

The marriage of J. W. Murphy of Fulton and Miss Kate Frawley of Oswego Falls will occur at the Catholic church in this village this afternoon at three o'clock. They will make Syracuse their home in their future.

John Norton who for the past five years has filled the position as clerk in Nettleton's shoe store in this village, left for Chicago last Thursday where he has secured an excellent situation. The TIMES wishes him all sorts of good luck.

The Oswego Falls Observer says that on Tuesday of last week, Mrs. Isaac Berry submitted to a painful surgical operation, performed by Dr. Wells of that place and Dr. Milne of Oswego. A large cancer of the breast was successfully removed. About twenty years ago Mrs. Berry had a cancer removed from her face.

Last Friday, while Michael Mehan was working with about thirty others at the bank near the saw mill where the state is putting in a new bulkhead, the bank caved in, completely covering him. He was dug out as soon as possible and carried home and medical aid summoned. Several ribs were broken and he sustained internal injuries. Dr. Pardee attended him.

The Fulton band during the campaign just ended have done considerable hard work. The band was never in as good condition as at present, and they are worthy of the many compliments bestowed upon them. The boys are deserving of assistance from our citizens, which they do not get. Their leader, Edward Croak is an excellent musician and understands how to conduct a band properly. After Kingsford's they have no equal in the county.

It is understood that among other things which the R. W. & O. and the N. Y. O. & W. managers have under consideration is the abandonment of the present east side depot of the R. W. & O. road and the establishment of a union depot at the present N. Y. O. & W. depot. It is hoped that the managers of the roads will speedily agree upon this. The arrangement would work to the advantage of both roads.—[Oswego Palladium.

Oswego Times: Marvin Cox, of Fulton the veteran stage and transfer man, is in town to-day. Mr. Cox is well known to the old time as well as modern traveling public of this vicinity. In 1840 he commenced driving stage for L. L. Kenyon of this city, his route being being between the "Chequered House" in Williamstown and Mexico. He also drove in the same employ between Oswego and Syracuse till 1848, when the Oswego & Syracuse railroad was completed to Fulton, when Mr. Cox drove the passengers from there to Oswego. He was the first agent of the American Express company in Fulton in 1848, and ran the transfer line between the station at Oswego Falls and Fulton till 1880, when he sold out to the present company and retired from business with a competency of worldly goods, accumulated by honesty and untiring labor.

Our village was wild with excitement last week. After the Democrats had "painted the town red" Thursday evening, the Republicans came out the next night and painted it one shade brighter, A portion of the town was handsomely illuminated along the line of march. The Young Men's Blaine and Logan club, and the Blaine and Logan escort of Oswego help swell the large procession, which was led by the former club. They made a fine appearance. About five hundred men and one hundred and fifty horsemen constituted their number. As the campaign is over with, and everybody is eager to read election returns, we will not detail the grand "blow-outs" of of both parties in this place last week. It will suffice to say that they eclipsed anything in previous campaigns. The [illegible] is what we are all looking to [illegible]

GIVEN AWAY.

[illegible] of Auburn, and that such efforts have always been fruitless for the reason that Mr. Beardsley preferred selling all the property together. At last the opportunity came and last Wednesday F. G. Weeks of Skaneateles, and E. R. Redhead of this village became the owners. This is considered one of the best water powers in New York State. The river has a level of six miles above this point and it is a remarkable fact that even during a freshet the highest rise will not exceed four feet. Messrs Weeks & Redhead bought this property with the intention of erecting a mammoth pulp mill and refitting the buildings now standing and occupied by E. W. Ross & Co., as a machine shop and foundry, to be used as a paper mill and to develop the water power. As yet no arrangements have been made as to whether or not Mr. Ross will remain, though it is probable that if the buildings can be rented at a reasonable price Mr. Ross will have the privilege of remaining. The new firm will secure the services of a first class civil engineer to perfect plans for the erection of pulp mills which will be started early in the spring. These gentlemen propose to sell or lease sites and power here to parties who will build paying manufactories on them. There is no reason now why Fulton should not have water works. An effort in that direction should be made at once. The transfer of this property into the hands of these enterprising gentlemen is another great boom to Fulton and is realized and appreciated by every citizen. It will be remembered that this firm recently purchased 3,000,000 feet of spruce timber in the vicinity of Pulaski in this county which will be brought here over the Ontario road to be manufactured into pulp. The prospects now are very flattering for Fulton's becoming one of the greatest manufacturing towns in this State.

The Fulton Campaign Glee Club.

The Republican party, especially of this city, is under great obligations to the Fulton campaign glee club, under the lead of the well known and popular vocalist, N. H. Gilbert. Artistically these gentlemen are classified as follows:

First tenor—Messrs. J. F. Cooper, H. A. Gage, T. D. Lewis. Second tenor—Messrs John Hadcock, G. E. Kirkpatrick, E. M. DeRusha, John Bacchus. First Bass—Messrs. F. D. VanWagenen, John Swan, N. H. Gilbert.

On the invitation of the Republican county committee and other managers of the Republican mass meetings held in the academy of music these gentlemen have visited Oswego, at least four times during the canvass, and each time they have sung to crowded and most delighted audiences Their music has been of the most entertaining character, and on every occasion they have been repeatedly and persistently encored and applauded to the echo. They have added zest and interest to the campaign from its opening until its close at the very successful rally in the academy last evening.

No campaign club ever organized in this part of the State has ever equalled them, or attained anything like their popularity, as the Presidential canvass of 1884, has been made memorable by their music in this section of the State, if for nothing else. They have made this whole community their friends, and "Mr. Gilbert and his choir," as a celebrated humorist called them, will always hold a warm place in the hearts of the Oswego people.—[Oswego Times.

Much Doubt as to Who Will be President.

Indiana and New Jersey Go for Blaine.

New York State Claimed by Both Parties.

This County Gives a Republican Majority of about 3,000.

Hon. Henry Howe Elected to the Assembly by Over 600.

Syracuse Standard of this morning says: More doubt envelops the whole situation to-day than has characterized the result of a national election in this country in many years. Through the vast array of conflicting reports from the States which voted yesterday, however, the Republican party can see its way clear to a victory, while not as pronounced as it might have been, is still reasonably satisfactory. Unlooked for results in sections of the union supposed to be safe complicate the task of estimating the exact outcome. At the hour at which the Standard goes to press, the pivotal States are more or less clouded with doubt, with the chances all in favor of the Republicans. New York State, the early returns from which were so disheartening as to bring about a capitulation on the part of the National Committee, may require an official canvass to ascertain the possession of its electoral vote. Our latest advices make out an unverified majority for Cleveland in the city of New York of only 43,000, which, in view of serious losses through the state amounting to from five to nine votes in election district, would be close shave. The upsetting of Democratic strongholds in several places, as in Elmira for example, will, it is believed, fix New York where she belongs. The Democratic majority at best cannot be much over 3,000. The apparent success of the Republican ticket in Virginia ought to encourage the party to entertain the highest hopes. They have too saved in all probability New Jersey and Connecticut, although there is no positive assurance of it. Indiana is also in doubt, the Democratic claim to it having little foundation in figures. Wisconsin and Michigan both tremble in the balance, but will undoubtedly turn up on better inspection to be Republican save and sound. Looking at the field from the best advices, the election of Mr. Blaine is altogether probable, even if New York has gone against him.

The losses which the Republicans have suffered have been the result of the candidacy of St. John, Had the Republicans not been led astray by it the State would have been carried high and dry, This is shown by the comparison of losses and the Prohibition vote. The Independents made no show except in New York city, where they probably offset defections from Cleveland. General surprise is expressed at the insignificance of the Butler vote.

Yesterday's election in this village passed off very quietly. The vote of this town and Granby as near as we can get at it as we go to press is as follows:

FEARFULLY COMMON.

Kidney Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages.—A Brilliant Recovery.

There is something starting in the rapid increase of Kidney diseases among the American people within a few years past. Many cases peculiar to certain classes tend to produce and aggravate these troubles—as, for example, careless living, overwork, and exposure. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is often congratulated on the exceptional success of his medicine called FAVORITE REMEDY, in arresting and radically curing these most painful and dangerous disorders. Proofs of this, like the following, are constantly brought to his attention and are published by him for the sake of thousands of other sufferers whom he desires to reach and benefit. The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the fine and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place or business on the corner of Main and Union Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 22, 1881.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR, For ten years I have been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except those who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this precise sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your FAVORITE REMEDY—I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended FAVORITE REMEDY to many people for Kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has not its equal in the wide world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others.

Yours, etc., LYMAN CRAWFORD.

Or to speak a little plainer,
That the meaning all may know,
Is it any body's business
If a lady has a beau?

"Is it any body's business,

Rides out with other ladies,
And doesn't let her know?
Is it any body's business,
But the gentleman's, if she Should accept another escort
Where he doesn't chance to be?"

Lacking space for the entire poem, we content ourselves with one additional stanza, which contains the "conclusion of the whole matter."

"The substance of our query,
Simply stated, would be this:
Is it any body's business
What another's business is?
If it is, or if it isn't,
We would really like to know;
For we are certain, if it isn't,
There are some who make it so."

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Hearths of gray marble may be cleaned by rubbing them with linseed oil.

Oil paintings hung over the mantelpiece are liable to wrinkle with the heat.

Patent leather shoes may be kept from cracking by slightly warming before putting on.

Carbolic soap used for scrubbing and cleaning will keep off all manner of insects.

Tinware after being cleansed and wiped dry should be placed near the fire. This will keep it from rust.

To clean red brick floors, rub them with a brick moistened with a little warm milk and water, and wipe them dry with a soft cloth.

Stains on tables caused by hot dishes may be removed by rubbing with lamp oil and a soft cloth, finishing with a little spirit of wine or eau-de-calogne, rubbed dry with another cloth.

Glue that is delicate for mounting ferns and sea weeds is made of five parts gum arabic, three parts white sugar, two parts starch, and a very little water. Boil until thick and white.

Soiled marble may be cleaned by coating it (after brushing off the dust) with thick musciloge and allowing the wind or sun to dry it. Shortly it will peel off and bring the dirt with it. A second or third application may be necessary.

Kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water, and render them as pliable as new. Kerosene will make tin tea-kettles as bright as new. Saturate a woolen rag and rub with it. It will also remove stains from clean varnished furniture.

To polish slate floors, use a smooth, flat piece of pumice stone, then polish with rotten stone. Washing well with soap and water once a week is usually enough to keep the slates clean, but by adopting the above method, not only do the slates become polished, but any stains are taken out.

Ink stains may be removed from colored table covers by dissolving a teaspoonful of oxalic acid in a teaspoonful of hot water and rubbing the stained part well with the solution. Ink stains may be taken out of anything white by simply putting a little powdered salts of lemon and cold water on the stain, allowing it to remain about five minutes, and then washing it out with soap and atewr, when the stains will disappear.

Read what the people say concerning the ability of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil to cure asthma, catarrh, croup, colds etc. Mrs. Dora Koch of Buffalo, says: "For croup it is decidedly efficacious." [Mrs. Jacob Mellisor of Marion Ohio, says the same thing.] S. S. Graves, Akron, N. Y., writes: "Had asthma of the worst kind, took one dose of Thomas' Eclectric Oil and was relieved in a few minutes. Would walk five miles for this medicine and pay $5 a bottle for it." Druggist C. R. Hall, Grayville, Ill., says: "Cured an ulcerated throat for me in twenty-four hours." "Sat up in bed and coughed till the clothing was wet with perspiration. My wife insisted that I use Thomas' Eclectric Oil. The first teaspoonful RELIEVED me." E. H. Perkins, Creek Centre, N. How Watch Cases are Made.

Imitation always follows a successful article, and imitation is one of the best proofs of real honest merit; and thus it is that the James Boss' Gold Watch Case has its imitators. Buyers can always tell the genuine by the trade-mark of a crown, from which is suspended a pair of scales. Be sure BOTH crown and scales are stamped in the cap of the watch case. Jewelers are very cautious about endorsing an article unless they not only know that it is good, but that the character of the manufacturers is such that the quality of the goods will be kept fully up to standard.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA., Feb. 12, 1883.

The James Boss' Gold Watch Cases go like hot cakes. Each one I sell sells another. Don't need to recommend them; they sell themselves. One of my customers has had a James Boss' Gold Watch Case in use for 20 years, and it is as good as ever. With this case I do not hesitate to give my own guarantee, especially with the new and improved cases, which seem to be everlasting. JESSE T. LITTLE, Jeweler.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., Jan. 2, 1883.

This gold case, No. [illegible], known as the James Boss' Gold Watch Case, came into my possession about 1856, has been in use since that time, and is still in good condition. The movement in the case which was in the case when I bought it, and its condition shows that the case has really out-worn the movement, which is played out. MARTIN A. HOWELL,

Of Board of Directors N. J. R. R. & Trans. Co.

The Girl Farmers of Dakota.

A broad shouldered, compactly built young women, with brown face and hard hands, sat in the Lake Shore depot last evening waiting for the departure of a train for the east. She had just arrived in town from Dakota. "We don't waste any time in foolishness out our way," she said to a young man who seemed to be acquainted with her. There's no lovemaking on my half section. It's nothing but No. 2 wheat from May to August. That's what we are out there for. Now I own and manage a farm of 320 acres, and this year I took out a crop of 18 bushels to the acre and sold it, got the cash, put it in the bank, discharged all my men but one, who will look after things this winter and I am off for a little fun down East. Marriage?" said she in response to some remark by her companion; "that's what all the good for nothing cranks of men that I can see from plowing time to harvest can talk about. What do I want to get married for? There are more than three hundred of us girl farmers in Dakota, and we hold a convention sometimes. I never saw a man yet that I would have around. I intend to farm it until I get money enough to live on comfortably, and then I'll see. I'm in the habit of doing about as I please. There was a nice young fellow in my neighborhood last July, who tried to be very gallant and wanted to help me whenever I did any work. If I chopped a little wood he wanted to do it. If I went after a pail of water he wanted to carry it. If I put a bag of grain on my shoulder he insisted on giving me a lift. He was a pretty nice boy but he made me tired. One day I wanted the hay rack on the wagon, and I took hold of one end and clapped it up on the wheel so quick that it made him dizzy. 'Let me' said he, but he only threw the whole thing down in trying to get the other end up. He didn't have the strength. Says I: 'Go, go away. You don't eat enough No. 2 Wheat.' Then I [illegible] We meet [illegible] there. They [illegible] I want one I [illegible]"—Chicago Herald.

A hundred beauties touch and thrill

Upon the bosom of the stream,
Like little ships of gold and brown,
The leaves go sailing up and down.
Now in the shade, now in the gleam,
Of many spots where mirrored lie
The changeful glories of the sky.

The branches sway beneath the breeze,
The shining nuts fall to the ground
In intermittent pattering sound,
From off the tall, old hickory trees,
And myriad sun-motes dance and gleam
Where floods of amber richness stream.

The pleasant sunlight gently falls
On fields with yellow shocks of corn,
And clearly sounds the tuneful horn;
With loud halloo the hunter calls,
And echoes swell and die away
In answer to the hound's deep bay.

A thousand insect voices fill
The air with one monotonous song,
And [illegible] shadows move along
The tall brown sedge upon the hill—
While from the tree tops round and round
The fluttering leaves fall to the ground.

O! season crowned with crimson leaves
May my days close like thine;
Made beautiful with deeds that shine
On life's great field as golden sheaves,
To speak the glorious country where
In rest unchangeable and fair.

The Wish-Bone.

BY RUTH HALL.

Slender and shining, prophetic bone,
We pulled it the future to divine;
Her bare pink palm, the bit in my own,
Told that wish and wish-bone both were mine.

"What did you ask for?" whispered my Rose,
Looking up shyly with eyes so true.
"I wished," I answered, drawing her close,
"The woman I win might look like you:

"Her eyes as brown as a forrest brook,
Her cheeks as pink as the sea shell's tint,
A tender mouth, and a saucy look,
And pale brown hair with a golden glint;

"In short that my future wife might be
You, dear little Rose, and only you."
Hiding her face in my breast, said she,
"Isn't it funny?—I wished that too."

—[Harper's Magazine for November.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

She stood there among the corn, the poppies and cornflowers, motionless as a statute, somewhat smart as she always was, with an attempt at gentility that made me smile as I noticed the long cotton gloves, the lace fichu, the would-be-fashionable poke-bonnet that looked so out of harmony with her surroundings. There was a strange smile, half deprecating, half defiant, on her handsome, gypsy-like face as I approached her, which, combined with her immobility, made me think that something unusual must have occured.

For Katie Goldie and I were great friends, in spite of the difference in our positions; she being Farmer Goldie's only daughter, and I the only child of the rector of the same little sea-bounded village. We had grown up from babyhood, knit together by the similarity of our circumstances—both the same age, both motherless, both only daughters of doting fathers, to whom we were equally devoted. But here the similarity ceased. Our characters were as different as were our positions.

Kate was all life, fire, energy: a capital manager, a better farmer than her father; full of health, spirits, and with a very fair idea of her own talents; while I, small, delicate, dreamy and romantic, and addicted to quite employments, let her take the lead in everything we did in common.

On any other day she would have run to meet me, and it was her unusual tranquility that surprised me. I knew she had been out of spirits for many months back, and no wonder. Times were hard for the farmers, and it seemed to me that every month Mr. Goldie had to draw in his horns more and more. Had anything fresh occurred, any new misfortune that could cause her to stand looking at me in that curious fashion?

"What is the matter?" I cried, as I approached her.

"Nothing is the matter; I was but thinking, and I want your advice, Miss Florence."

"It must be something very important," I said, "that causes you to stand still for full five minutes."

"It is important; come we will walk together, and I will tell you all about it."

Gladly I assented, for I was burning with curiosity. She put her arms within mine, and proceeded, with her usual straightforwardness, and at times jarring bluntness, to lay the case before me.

"You see, Miss Florence," she began, "they both wants"——

"Want," I corrected.

"Well!" impatiently, "didn't I say wants? to marry me, and I don't know which to take. I was thinking about it when you came up."

"But who are 'they'?" I asked. Are 'they' Jim Taylor and Walter Butler, for if so——"

"No," sadly, "not Walter; it's Jim Taylor and David Wardour."

"But, Kate, you puzzle me. I thought," in a low tone, "I always fancied that it was Walter——"

"I was not speaking of myself, but of them—Jim Taylor and David Wardour—which shall it be?"

I withdrew my arm from hers in a [illegible] of righteous indignation.

"I don't understand you," I cried; "[illegible] it be either, when you [illegible]

[illegible] to be indignant now, [illegible]

[illegible] them both ever so long; have you heard him say?"

But I was too indignant to answer her question,

"Kate, I said loftily, "I am ashamed of you. I never thought that you would look on matrimony in this spirit. It's quite shocking. Which the richest, indeed! Oh! it is horrible. It ought to be no question of money, only of which you—you—love the best. I never thought you would be so worldly."

"Miss Florence, you are a goose," was Kate's unmannerly rejoinder, as she walked away from me toward her own home, leaving me still with an expression of conscious virtue depicted on my countenance.

During the days that ensued I saw nothing of Kate, and by degrees it dawned on me that we two old friends were indulging in the folly of a quarrel. I was, however, sincerely disgusted with her, and my disgust was increased when, a few days after I met her in the corn field, my father announced to me that he had heard in the village that she was engaged to be married to Jim Taylor,

"You must go this afternoon and congratulate her, Flo," he continued, quite unaware that Kate and I were not on speaking terms. But this state of things could not continue, so I took his advice and went down to Hawthorn Farm in the afternoon to offer my congratulations and tacitly cry Pax!

I found Kate looking ill, with dark rings round her eyes, and by no means the blushing bride-elect. She received my congratulations very calmly.

"He is here," she said; "I will call him. "Jim, come here and speak to Miss Florence. He is shelling peas for me," she continued; "I always make him useful—I can't abide idle fellows."

I began to feel rather sorry for Jim.

He came in, however, anything but sorry for himself, radiant and blushing as any girl; but as he was eminently uncomfortable in my presence, Kate soon dismissed him to the peas again, and resumed her conversation. She was far more talkative than usual, being as a rule rather silent.

"Yes," she continued, "we shall marry very soon, so as to be well settled down before harvest; for you know, Miss Florence, we are going to live here and manage the farm. Father is getting old, and he worries himself to death about things, so now Jim and I will do it all, and—Jim has plenty of capital"—defiantly.

"Oh, yes, it is all very nice," I answered, somewhat sarcastically; "and I am sure Jim is a good fellow," I added more warmly; "he looks it."

"Oh, he is very well;" then more brightly: "I'll tell you what he is, Miss Florence; he is a right-down good farmer, and that is what we wants here."

"I am very glad to hear it." I answered, and very shortly after took my leave. There was a constraint about us both that made the interview anything but satisfactory, and I was pleased—almost for the first time in my life—to leave sweet Hawthorn Farm, where I had always been so happy. There was a sad alteration in it since the days when I used to go there in Kate's holiday time and eat strawberries or cake, according to the season of the year, then everything about the place had been bright and prosperous; now all spoke of want of money. True, it was as tidy as, under the circumstances, it could be, but it was a shabby, poverty stricken tidiness compared to the old days of spick-and-span neatness, which it was to be hoped Jim's capital might restore.

As I walked through the village street toward home, whom should I encounter but Walter Butler. He was sauntering along with his hands in his pockets, whistling loudly and looking anything but the love-sick swain. For the first time, good-looking as he was, his countenances repelled me, and involuntarily I contrasted it with Jim's straightforward, ingenuous face. How idle he looked too! Surely he could not again have left his place. When last I had seen him he had been keeper to Mr. Groves, about three miles inland.

"Good evening, Walter," I said.

"Good evening miss."

"Are you come home for a holiday?" I continued.

"I've left Mr. Groves," he answered somewhat defiantly.

"I'm sorry for that," I replied. "I am afraid you are rather a rolling stone."

"I am not a-going to stay in a place where I am not trusted," he responded, almost impertinently. Then: So Kate Goldie is going to be married? I wonder how Jim Taylor will like keeping that old father of hers? I reckon he won't make much out of that place, as it has had nothing put into it for these many years past."

"This is his affair," I answered. "Good evening, Walter," and I passed on.

Six weeks later Kate Goldie and Jim Taylor were made man and wife in the little village church. To my mind, Kate looked beautiful. Her simple white dress and bonnet became her better than her ordinarily rather smart attire, and her unusual pallor was an improvement to her. The happy pair went straight home to Hawthorn Farm and began the business of life at once. The whole affair seemed sadly lacking in romance.

All this time Walter remained idling about the village, picking up a few shillings at haymaking, harvesting, etc., etc., and haunting Hawthorn Farm as soon as ever Mr. and Mrs. Taylor were settled there. He would stroll up to the house and present his handsome face at the kitchen window, where Kate would be busy with her cooking or her baking, or he would walk boldly in and offer to help her with anything in which she [illegible]

In those days I often used to go and see Kate, and always found her busy and industrious, but with a haggard, worried look in her eye that ought not to have been there, for her affairs were looking up—the harvest was a good one, Jim worked like two men, fences were repaired, more hands were taken on, new machinery bought, and altogether Hawthorn Farm began to wear a faint resemblance to its former self. Old Mr. Goldie, too, was perfectly happy, Jim was an attentive and respectful son-in-law, and it seemed to me that, except that her husband was too soft, as she once said to me, Kate had nothing to complain of.

One afternoon when I strolled up there I found, to my annoyance, Walter Butler, with a pipe in his mouth, sitting in the best parlor, while Kate sat in the window mending. I at once evinced my displeasure by saying, with marked coldness:

"I will not stay, Kate, as I see you are occupied," and I was about to withdraw when she flung down her work and came after me.

"O, Miss Florence, do stay—do stay!"

There was a ring of entreaty in her voice that struck me, and I turned round again.

"I can't stay," I answered, "if Walter Butler is sitting there smoking."

"He shan't sit there—he shall go."

"I thought you could not abide lazy fellows, Kate?" I continued, somewhat maliciously.

"No more I can," she answered flushing. "I hate them? Oh, I hate them!"

There was a passion, a fire about her as she ejaculated these words that puzzled me and made me at once go back with her. We found Walter still lounging on the pretty chintz-covered sofa, but my presence seemed to make Kate brave. for she said to him:

"Now, just you go about your business, Walter, and take your nasty pipe out of this room when Miss Florence is coming into it."

He rose sulkily enough.

"Good-by, Kate," he said patronizingly, made me a surly salute, and was about to leave the room when Jim came in—fair, red-faced kebonair, as usual. Not so debonair, though, that he could not shoot a glance of anger and contempt at Walter Butler.

"What be you a-doing here?" he asked, and then turned, after greeting me, to to Kate.

"My dear," he said gently; "I wants my tea early to-day.

I stayed and had tea with them, and was more than ever struck with Jim's gentleness and goodness to his wife, and by his innate good breeding, I began to think that Kate had married well.

Her manner towards him was singularly variable. One minute it was cold, the next warm; it was contemptuous, yet at times respectful—altogether a riddle.

"What a good husband you have Kate!" I remarked as he left the room to return to his work.

"Yes," she answered, "he is well enough—he is very good to father and me—that I can't deny—but he's not much of a man," she added with some contempt. "When you marry, Miss Florence, marry a man as will look after you."

"Why, Kate, Jim is always thinking of you. I should not have thought that you, who are so very independent, cared to be looked after so much."

"You are not married, Miss Florence. You don't understand," and with this, for me, rather humiliating remark, the conversation ceased.

It was a few weeks after this that Jim proved himself the man in the sense I could not understand, in so satisfactory a manner that he and Kate have been the happiest of couples ever since. Kate herself told me all about it in a moment of expansion, following immediately the event.

It seemed that one day when Walter was lounging about her while she was busy in her kitchen-garden, Jim came in very quietly—he was always quiet—at an hour when he was usually out in the fields, with a heavy carter's whip in his hand. He walked up to Walter.

"Now," said he, quite calmly, "I wants to know what business you always have here, prowling about my wife? If ever I catch you in this here garden or house again I will lay this"—holding up the whip—"about your shoulders; so now you better be gone."

Walter stared in amazement at the quiet, fair-haired man. "You oaf, you." he said.

"An oaf, am I?" said Jim; "then take this," and gave him a smart cut with the whip.

With a cry of rage Walter tried to spring on him, but Jim kept his head and eluded him.

"Don't try that," he said, "or you will get the worst of it," and once more he raised the whip menacingly,

"Kate, go in," he said, with a ring of authority in his voice she had never heard there before, but she did not stir. How could she, when love and admiration for her husband were surging through her veins, and her heart was beating so that she could not move?

For one minute the two men stood eyeing each other, and then lithe and active Jim had seized Walter round the waist and thrown him to the ground. There was a cry of joy, of pride, and Kate ran up to her husband.

"Oh, Jim! I am so glad, so glad!"

He looked at her wonderingly, but did not answer, for Walter, with an evil white face, had risen to his feet, and finding his despised antagonist too much for him, was preparing to beat an undignified retreat. The sight of Kate, clinging to her husband's arm, seemed too much for him. He shook his fist [illegible] with fury, at them both, then [illegible]

"Did you say you were glad, Kitty?" he asked incredulously.

"Oh! so glad. Jim, I have been so miserable. He would come here day after day and reproach me with having behaved badly to him, and say that I had given my promise to marry him. So I had, but after I had said 'yes,' he cooled off, became quite distant like, and never came near me. Then I grew sore and angry, and when he went away to Mr. Groves' without ever a word to me, I vowed I would have nothing more to say to him. It was just about that time that poor father lost so much money, and when you came and asked me to marry you, I thought as how you were rich and——"

"Yes, yes, I know all about that. Kitty; you never hid from me why you married me. But why did you never tell me how Walter persecuted you? I would sooner have sent him about his business. I thought," rather sadly and hesitatingly, "that you liked him to come."

"And I thought," with downcast eyes, "that you were not—not—man enough, Jim, and I was angry that you did not show more spirit, and I said to myself 'you were but a poor thing.' But now," with a glow of pride, "I know differently, and oh! I am so glad he is gone. He is a bad one, he is."

Jim drew her to him and kissed her.

"He is a bad 'un, Kate, and do you know why he became so cool and distant to you after asking you to marry him? Because he found out that affairs here were in a bad way and that he would have uncommonly little money, instead of a great deal, as he had fancied. Don't you think you are well rid of him for a husband?"

"I do, Sim, indeed I do—and, Jim, I have always been a good wife to you, although I did marry you because you were rich and would let father live with us, but now"—in a whisper—"you know—yes, you know——"

"What, Kitty? Say it out loud."

"Why, you know that I love you."

That is word for word as Kate told the story to me. She is a comely matron now, with half a dozen children about her. I am still Miss Florence, not having yet found the man equal to look after me.

Dr David Kennedy, Roundout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—About eight years ago I began to suffer from a Liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than calling it a "drawing in" sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect opon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to any business. This covered a period of a year. Finally Mr Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your FAVORITE REMEDY as an excellent thing for the liver, I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found most decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without my former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot better express my approbation of Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommednded it to many of my friends and acquaintances. A GREAT ENTERPRISE.

Papers on The Civil War.

The important features of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE for the coming year—indeed, perhaps the most important ever before undertaken by the magazine will be a series of separate papers on the great battles of the War of the Union, written by general officers high in command upon both the Federal and Confederate sides,—General Grant (who writes of Vicksburg, Shiloh, and other battles), Generals Longstreet, McClellan, Beauregard, Rosecrans, Hill, Admiral Porter and others. The series opens in the November Century with a graphically illustrated article on the written by the Confederate general, G. T. Beauregard. Brief sketches entitled "Recollections of a Private," papers chronicling special events, descriptions of various auxiliary branches of the service, etc., will supplement the more important series by the various generals.

A strict regard for accuracy will guide the preparation of the illustrations, for which the CENTURY has at its disposal a very large quantity of photographs, drawings, portraits, maps, plans, etc., hitherto unused. The aim is to present in this series, not official reports, but commanding officers' accounts of their plans and operations,—interesting personal experience which will record leading events of the war, and possess at the same time, a historical value not easily calculated.

In this line the CENTURY will maintain its prestige, and furnish the best stories of American writers that can be procured. In November begins

JOHN A. MCKAY - - EDITOR

TO OUR READERS.

A newspaper occupies a very important place in a community. One that is poorly written and made up from the clippings of other papers is a detriment to any town. A live progressive newsy sheet puts energy into business and the people. It is the pulse by which the commercial prosperity of a people is judged.

Holding to these thoughts as true, we feel that in assuming control of this paper we have accepted a position of grave responsibility, and are accountable to the people of Oswego county and of Fulton and Oswego Falls in particular, for the editing of a first class newspaper. We have come to Fulton to stay. Your success means our success, and the converse is true.

It shall be our strong endeavor to help build up the business of Fulton and Oswego Falls, and through the columns of this paper to divert from neighboring towns a large trade that belongs to this place, and to bring it back here.

Efforts will be made in due time to prove to business men and to capitalists the importance of the situation of our two villages for manufacturing purposes and their availability and importance as centers of trade.

To farmers we would say, that much time will be devoted to agricultural topics and that matter will be presented to you notice, that in merit and practical suggestions will not be excelled by any agricultural paper in the country. Every line will be well worth your reading.

Our readers will be kept fully informed of the world's doings—Local affairs will receive especial attention. The job department will be made a marked feature of the office, and all kinds of work will be done with neatness and despatch. Satisfaction in work and prices are guaranteed.

This paper will be strictly independent. By this we do not mean to be a "dependent" or a "knownothing" or to occupy a plane lower than a party paper. We feel that a journal absolutely independent in its relations to government, stands on the highest political plane. To attain to this end is difficult. It involves an unbiassed judgement and an honest endeavor to discover what government is best for our people; and more than that, a fearlessness in teaching those conclusions which have been arrived at with an honest purpose. We stand on this belief. The aim is high. How near we may come to the mark is vain to imagine. We shall strive our utmost to be consistent with this doctrine.

FIFTY-FIVE millions of people have passed through the most remarkable election contest ever witnessed by a great nation. It was hoped that at the close of election day victory, or defeat for either side would have been so decisive as to remove all cause for political turbulence and party antagonisms and remove the cause of the unsettled state of business. But the election has been so close in this state that party feeling has grown more intense and the whole people of this government are working themselves into such a feeling of prejudice as to make a final decision for either party a basis for fierce accusation and party antagonism. In this state of affairs we counsel wisdom and patience, Each party is lead and this canvass conducted by their ablest men. They have each made an especial effort to have each district vote counted fairly. Each party knows that fraud or any dishonest practice will be met by a prompt disclosure, and neither party in the face of the present high state of public feeling will dare do any act that would add fuel to the flames, or make them responsible for any riotous proceeding. The shrewdest men in each party will scrutenize every move and each side will be treated as the perfection of dishonesty. The result will be that a fair count will be had, And whatever the result may be whether it be a majority for either candidate of only one vote, we ask all our readers to acquiesce in and say that it is right. We are all under leaders. If our leaders say it is right it is not for us to gainsay it. They can judge better than we. Let us all be patient and accept the final decision and settle down once more to business.

DO NOT get the idea that the election of either candidate will prove a commercial disaster to this country. You elect one-third of your congress every two years, and congress is the factor which you must consider in making your business calculations. The question of bad trade has been so thorough[illegible]

[illegible] Blood poisoning [illegible] head was badly [illegible]. Mr. Arnot was re-elected to Congress without opposition on Tuesday last. He is a brother of Stephen and Matthew Arnot, the millionaire bankers of Elmira, and is deservedly one of the most popular as well as one of the best known men of the southern tier. Several New York physicians have been called into the case, but there is little hope."

ELECTION is over, and the usual thrift and push in business circles is again visible in our midst. The merchant, mechanic and laborer will soon forget the excitement of the past five months, and it is well that they should, for the average man derives none of this world's goods from the political war path. Winter is upon us, and the man who is dependent for the support of himself and family on his daily labor will do well to see that the many wants of the household are to be gratified. None but the office-seekers and the monopolists make money out of politics.

THE defeat of Tammany on the city ticket and the election of Cleveland, has probably reduced John Kelly's strength as a leader to such an extent that he will never fully recover. The county Democracy will now take the place of Tammany in this State. Kelly has had his day.

INTENSITY of interest in our government and law makers, is the order of the day. The eager eyes of our whole people will be upon our next President and Congress, and whoever they are we anticipate that in view of their peculiar situation we shall have a year of safe legislation.

CARDS are out announcing the wedding of Hon. Daniel Manning and Miss Livingston Fryer to occur November 19th.

BLAINE'S plurality in this county is 2,542, while that of Garfield's, four years ago, was 3,490, a falling off of 948.

CHEESE MARKETS.

The Utica Markets.

UTICA, Nov. 10, 1884.

The market to-day was something of a surprise to both salesmen and buyers. It was expected that cheese would be bought for something less than last week, but there was evidently a disposition on the part of some buyers to sustain the former prices, The cheese which sold at the best prices was taken for export, and just about one-half the sales were for that trade, the rest being for home consumption. The sales of to-day take cheese off all the way from the 12th to the 25th of October.

The average date would be somewhere in the neighborhood of the 19th or 20th. One party sold all his Octobers at 11¾c.; although only half of them are to be shipped this week.

Transactions of the day were as follows: 4 lots, 300 boxes, at 11c.; 40 lots, 3,424 boxes, at 11¼c.; 5 lots, 446 boxes, at 11⅜c.; 9 lots, 729 boxes, at 11½c.: 4 lots, 320 boxes, at 11⅝c.; 11 lots, 1,241 boxes, 11¾c.; 8 lots, 535 boxes, at 11⅞c.; and 3 lots, 350 boxes, at private terms. Sales 7,445 boxes; commissions 212 boxes; total 7,657 boxes. Ruling price 11¼c. Transactions of corresponding day last year 7,730 boxes at 11c. ruling; in 1882 they were 7,335 at 11¾c. ruling; in 1881 they were 4,161 at 11½c. ruling; and in 1880 they were 8,572 at 12¼c. ruling. Shipments will probably be lighter next week.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

LITTLE FALLS, Nov. 10, 1884.—There has been quite a fair business done today, but the amount does not reach the point that might have been expected, following the light sale of last week. The best factories looked for a 12 cent rate, and failing to find it some of them held their stock, tho' most sold. Nearly all the cheese selling at over 11½c. was September stock, and there was also a portion of that selling at 11¼c. that was September. The finest lots were eagerly sought for. Factories have now sold to about October 12, on the average, and there are extremely few September cheese yet left in this vicinity. Factories are generally now making only every other day, some, only once in three days. Transactions to-day are:

Lots	Boxes	Price
21	1,280	11¼
42	2,657	11½
4	494	11¾
3	201	p. t.
6	250	com.
80	4,960
Farm Dairy	820
Total	5,780

FARM DAIRIES.—Sales amount to 820 boxes and prices ranged at 11 to 12⅝c. Only one lot sold at over 12c. and only one at 12c. the bulk going at 11¾c.

BUTTER.—Eighty packages farm dairy butter brought 26 to 27c. very little selling at the former rate.

AT FULTON.

The cheese market was rather inactive at this place Monday night. About fifteen factories were represented with 1,[illegible] boxes of cheese, of which 600 boxes were sold at Utica ruling, which rated at 11¼ cents. Many factories held over until next week.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The president has issued the following proclamation:

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7, 1884.

By the President of the United States of America a Proclamation:

The season is nigh when it is the yearly wont of this people to observe a day appointed for the purpose by the President, as an especial occasion for thanksgiving unto God. [illegible] Auburn to the [illegible] company of Fulton; the [illegible] being L. A. Weeks of [illegible] and R. R. Redhead of this village. Since then the owners have sought the advice of Mr. Joseph Cowles, an eminent civil engineer and practical mill wright of Rochester, N. Y. He came on Friday last and looked over the grounds and advised as to location and construction of the proposed new pulp mill; owing to the lateness of the season, and their desire to manufacture as much as possible of the timber lately purchased into paper before any national change shall be made in the business of the country or it shall be decided that the present tariff on manufactured goods shall be lowered by Congress they determined to put machinery into the old stone mills, using the power already there and getting in readiness for operation as soon as possible. It is the intention of these parties, should the outlook for business continue fairly good, to construct a generous hydraulic race from the falls down the river to the bridge, and as power is needed, as far as their land lying north of Broadway extends, and covering the spacious grounds whereon is now erected the rink, with manufactories. The water sight just purchased includes one half of the Oswego river, and extending to the center of the river at the Falls, and is estimated at not less then 8,000 horse power. The Oswego canal runs through the whole length of it. The Ontario railroad will continue a branch track along side, the D. L. & W. is in close proximity so that shipping facilities are almost unequalled to so vast a power, which in the procuring of coal iron and lumber for large enterprises is a very important factor to be taken into account. It is hoped that the present prosperity of the country will not suffer by any change of administration which occurs on the 4th of March next, and that our own village together with the whole country may steadily prosper.

The Binghamton Republican speaks of the gentleman as follows: "Prof. Burt Bailey, of Boston, gave an exhibition of his skill at the Pioneer rink Saturday evening before a good sized audience. During the exhibition Mr. Bailey executed a number of new monœvres which excited hearty applause. His performance was conceded by all to be one of the very best of the kind that has been witnessed in this city and it is hoped that he will reappear here at an early date."

Celebrating at a Ripe Age.

A number of the friends and relatives of Freeman Gasper assembled at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. L. A. Van Buren, on Oneida street Monday afternoon, to celebrate his 90th birthday. Mr. Gasper is one of the oldest settlers of Oswego county, and to-day is as active on foot as many a man at fifty. His intellect is as bright as that of a youth. Mr. Gasper will acknowledge our thanks for a plate of delicious cake from his hands. Our wish is that he may live to enjoy many more years of happiness in our midst.

Electric Mouth Lamp.

Dr. Curtis has just put into actual practice a little lamp about the size of the end of your forefinger, fed from a four cell battery in his back office, by which he is able to light up the oral cavity to a degree equal to two candle power. The uses of this incandescent lamp are almost incalculable to the dentist. The doctor thinks that no hidden cavity of decay or dead pulp, or even a neuralgic twinge can escape his notice with this valuable light to assist him in his investigations.

Good Templars.

The anniversary exercises of the Good Templars Lodge of Fulton, will be held in their hall in the Kenyon block, on Friday evening, 14th inst., to which the public are invited. The Juvenile Temple connected with the Lodge will furnish a programme of singing, recitation, etc., which will be interesting.

An admission fee of 10 cents will be charged to assist in paying for an organ for the use of the Lodge.

Exercises will commence at 8 o'clock p. m.

E. W. Ross Will Leave Fulton.

We regret to learn that E. W. Ross has decided to remove his foundry and machine shop from our town. Mr. Ross is an enterprising business man, and has all along given employment to a large number of men. He has not yet fully decided when or where he will locate. His removal will be the means of throwing a number of men out of employment, and this will be seriously felt by our village.

Please Take Notice.

Having removed our improved steam feather renovater to Fulton, also having purchased the new IXL steam drying pan, we are better prepared than ever to clean feather beds and pillows making them light and lively as new. Satisfaction guaranteed or no pay. All orders left at James Cole's will receive prompt attention. BLUNT & JOHNSON.

The Democrats Will Celebrate.

This evening the Democrats will celebrate the election of Cleveland and Hendricks in grand style. Their cup of happiness is full to overflowing and the people may expect a grand demonstration. There will be a parade during which some ridiculous wagers will be carried out. Plenty of fun is expected.

It is well for housekeepers and others to know that contracts for articles such as pianos, sewing machines, and the like, bought on the installment plan, must hereafter be filed in the county clerk's office.

[illegible] who died at his late residence on Rochester street on Thursday afternoon last, aged [illegible] years. Mr. Boomer was born in Jefferson county in 18[illegible], and came to this village when about 15 years of age. He commenced his business career in life as clerk in G. P. Kenyon's store which stood upon the grounds where the present Kenyon block now stands. His next step was to enter the office of M. S. Kimball where he fitted himself for a civil engineer, continuing in that business for fifteen years during which time he figured prominently in the construction of the locks at this place. He then bought an interest in the buss line with Marvin Cox and remained in the same until he entered the mercantile business which he followed up to his death. He was very successful in business and leaves his family in good circumstances. A widow, three daughters and one son, married, are left to mourn his loss. The deceased spent the summer abroad in trying to regain his health and at times seemed to rally, but for the last few weeks has gradually failed. The deceased was a lover of his home and family. He was noted among business men for his uprightness and integrity. Socially he was always genial and was possessed of great generosity. All who were acquainted with him held him in high esteem and his presence will be greatly missed. The deceased at the approach of death named the following gentleman to act as bearers: Willis Ney, S. B. Whitaker, F. M. Wilson, C. H. Davids, A. Osborn and A. Emerick. The funeral took place at his late residence on Rochester street on Sunday at 2 p. m. and was largely attended. Rev. J. F. Barnes of the Universalist church officiated. The music was furnished by the following quartette: Miss Ada Thayer, soprana; Mrs. James T. Pratt, alto; Mr. F. A. Gage, tenor; Mr. H. N. Gilbert, basso. The remains were interred at Mt. Adnah.

JOHN C. HIGHRITER.

As we go to press, the remains of one of our oldest, most reliable and energetic business men are being carried to their final resting place. John C. Highriter breathed his last on Sunday afternoon. It was a fitting day to close an earthly life that had been so thoroughly consistent in following and putting in practice Christ's teachings. He died at the advanced age of seventy-six, after a long suffering from Bright's disease. He was born in New York city, August 17, 1808, and from there went with his parents to Troopsville, Cayuga county, N. Y., when about six years old. From there he removed to the town of Mentz in the same county, and remained there until he went to learn the hatter's trade at Auburn. At the latter place he apprenticed to the firm of Carpenter & Bodly. After serving his time with them he came to Fulton and went into business with E. Bristol, which firm later on, sold out to H. & B. Church. Mr. Highriter then returned to Auburn and commenced work with A. T. Carpenter with whom he continued two years. Returning again to Fulton he went into the hatting business with Alonzo Forsyth. Some time after he purchased Mr. Forsyth's interest in the business and continued alone. Later on a co-partnership was formed with Jared Shepherd. Their business relations not proving congenial, Mr. Highritrr bought out Mr. Shepherd, and remained alone in business from that time until his disease. In church matters he was always very prominent. In the framing and raising of the timbers of Zion Church his hands assisted. Upon the organization of this church he was elected a warden, which position he carried with him to his new home, wearing the badge of faithfulness in the performancs of his duty.

Zion Church will seem wanting in something when we go there and do not see that aged form that we have been accustomed to see since the time we first entered its portals as a child. He was noted for his uprightness of character and kindly nature, and as a generous giver in good works. With him passes away one more of the honored landmarks which knew Fulton in its infancy.

He leaves a widow and six children. Mrs. E. C. Miller, Morris C. Highriter and Mrs. Mary J. Hornibrook, all residing at Fulton. Mrs. F. S. Eayrs, of Brooklyn, J. C. Highriter, Jr., of Scranton, Pa., and Mrs. T. O. Hammond, of Syracuse. All are in attendance at the funeral, which is held at Zion Church this afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. W. Beauchamp, of Baldwinsville, officiating.

The first bill in this suit was dismissed because the security for the costs of the court were not forthcoming.

Law for Farmers—Hiring Farm Help.

HIRING MINORS.—A great many farm hands are minors, under the age of twenty-one. Such persons cannot make a contract which will be binding upon them, except for necessaries. Because of their inexperience in the sharp conflicts of business, the law relieves them from the obligation of keeping their agreements if they wish to avoid them. Consequently if the farmer hires a hand, under twenty-one, to work one year, or any definite time, and the hand leaves just before harvest, without legal cause, or simply because he can get more wages elsewhere, the farmer cannot keep any of his back pay, or in any way get damages for the minors breach of contract. Under such circumstances the minor will be entitled to the amount due him at the rate he hired, or, if he thinks he hired at too low a rate, he can throw up the contract entirely, and recover from his employer what his services are actually worth.

There is another consideration with respect to the hiring of children, more important than the foregoing. Parents, being under obligations to support and care for their children, are entitled to their services until they are twenty one years old; or, if the children work out, they are entitled to their wages until that time. When therefore the farmer hires a hand under twenty-one, he must see to it that he pays the wages to the party to whom they belong; otherwise he may have to pay them twice. Unless the child has been emancipated, that is, has had his "time" given him, payment to him will not generally prevent the parent from collecting payment again. If the child falsely represents himself to be of age, or emancipated, such fraud will not prevent the parent from collecting his wages, or the value of his services.

A child may become emancipated by agreement between himself and parent, by the parent's casting him off to shift for himself, by the parent's absconding to parts unknown, or by the parent's becoming so poor as to be unable to care for the child. In all of these cases the child becomes entitled to his wages, may sue for them if necessary and recover the amount due him at the rate he hired, or may throw up his contract and recover the actual value of his services. There is a growing tendency among American Courts to favor children who are trying to earn an honest living for themselves. This tendency is in keeping with the spirit of our free institutions, and the child will generally be given the right to his wages whenever there is any show of authority for it. The courts of some of the States have gone so far as to hold that where the parent permits his child to go and hire out by himself, and to receive his wages without objection, that the parent then loses his rights in the premises, and payment to the child discharges the debt. The statutes of some of the States have regulated the matter by providing that unless the parent gives notice within a certain time to the employer that he claims the minor's wages, he loses his right to them. In New York, notice be given in thirty days of the date of hiring.

FARM APPRENTICES.—Apprentices are persons "bound" to another to learn a certain trade or business. They are more common in the mechanical trades than upon farms, but the law governing them is equally applicable to all kinds of business. A boy may be bound out upon a farm until he is twenty-one by a written instrument called "Articles of Apprenticeship," which must be entered into by the minor or by his parent or guardian, or by the minor with the written consent of his parent or guardian, and which then becomes binding upon him and upon his master, until the apprenticeship expires. If either party fails to live up to such articles, he becomes liable to the other for the damage so caused. Such articles must conform to the local statutes governing the matter, be in writing, and under seal, must generally be made in duplicate, and in some States recorded. It is the duty of the master to instruct the apprentice in all the knowledge of the craft or business which he has undertaken to teach him, to watch over his conduct, give him good advice, set him a good example, be kind to him, employ him only in the trade he is to learn, and keep all the covenants undertaken by him in the articles. It is said he may moderately chastise him if necessary, but here he should let his moderation be known. It is the duty of the apprentice to obey the master's lawful commands, care for his property, promote his interests, learn the trade or business, stay the term out, and perform all the covenants undertaken by him in the articles. If the apprentice works for third persons the master is entitled to his wages or value of his services just as a parent is in case of a minor. It is the duty of the parent or guardian to inquire into the treatment of the apprentice, and to defend him from all cruelty, neglect, or breach of covenant on the part of the master. There are in most states statutory regulations for the binding out of orphans and poor children by certain public officials. In such cases, such officials stand in much the same positions as parents or guardians.—[American Agriculturist.

Recent Experiments in Crop-Feeding.

Paul Wagner has compared the feeding capacities of peas and barley by growing these plants in zinc vessels and under uniform conditions. The same [illegible]

[illegible] the same [illegible] little effect upon the peas, while with the barley the results are remarkably beneficial, ranging from thirteen per cent. when the nitrogen only was added to fifty-five per cent. when applied in combination with potash and phosphoric acid. Manuring with potash and phosphoric acid brought a gain of forty-seven per cent. to the pea crop, only a little less than when the nitrogen was added (No. 8.) The soil nitrogen was sufficient for the growth of the peas, while it did not supply the needs of the barley plants. Stated in another way, the facts are still more striking: The potash and phosphoric acid brought twenty-six per cent. more dry matter, and this gain contained .06 grain of nitrogen. The addition of .2 grain of nitrogen in the soda salt gave an increase of eighty-one per cent. of dry matter, and .18 grain of nitrogen. It is seen that nearly all the nitrogen was recovered in the crop.

The experiments show that peas are much better able than barley to assimilate the nitrogen of the soil. The pea crop in the experiments contained between three and four times as much nitrogen as the barley plants, but this does not indicate that peas should have more nitrogenous manure than barley. Peas can obtain their supply of nitrogen from any ordinary soil, and respond freely to applications of potash and phosphoric acid. Barley, on the other hand, though needing comparatively little nitrogen, obtains it with difficulty, and is greatly benefited by nitrogenous manures. These experiments do not agree with the idea that crops should be manured with those elements of plant food abundantly found in them by anlyses.

Peas are closely related to clover, both belonging to the legumes, and barley is a first cousin to wheat. The facts here presented accord with those determined by experience, experiment, and anlyses regarding clover and wheat. Clover does not respond quickly to nitrogenous manures, though containing a comparatively high per cent. of nitrogen in its composition. Wheat, requiring only a little nitrogen, is not able to obtain that little easily, and is much benefitted by the application of soluble compounds of nitrogen. It is easy for clover to get its large amount of nitrogen, while it is difficult for the wheat to obtain its small per cent. of the same element. The conclusion here obtained is opposed to the use of the so-called special manures made for any particular crop.—[American Agriculturist.

Spread Direct From Stable.

Dr. H. P. Armsby, of the Wisconsin Experiment Station, favors hauling and spreading manure at once, rather than heap it at barn or in field, with the single exception of hillsides, where, to avoid washing of plant food to lowlands or into streams, it is best put on as short a time as practicable before plowing under. So far as the other objections commonly urged against the practice apply to level surface he says:

"The loss of manure by leaching through the soil will be very small, usually because all respectably good have the power of taking up the valuable matters out of their solution in water and retaining them, ready to feed crops. Only on the lightest lands is there reason to fear any great loss in this way.

The only valuable part of the manure which can be converted into gas is its nitrogen, which may escape as ammonia. The extent of this loss has usually been overrated. Stable manure contains but a small proportion of nitrogen, and a still smaller proportion of this is capable of being quickly converted into ammonia and given off as gas. Moreover, the organic matter of stable manure, its humus, has a considerable power of retaining ammonia when it is formed, and, finally, the condition in the field are not favorable to the formation and escape of ammonia. The manure is too scattered to get up the heat necessary to a vigorous chemical action, and its nitrogen is more likely to be changed to nitrates and dissolved out by the rain. Even if ammonia is formed, however, it will not escape into the air unless the manure becomes pretty thoroughly dried out."

In view of these facts—that the chance is so small of sacrificing fertilizing elements on level surface of good soil by prompt spreading—the doctor concludes that no man need hesitate to adopt this system if convinced that it is an advantage to him in other ways. Some of the best farmers we have known, among them the late George Geddes, favored such speedy disposal of stable accumulations, partly because the heavy labor could be done piecemeal, during the comparative leisure of winter, and thus avoid a tedious spring job when other work was pressing, and at the same time save at least one extra handling of the manure.—[N. Y. Tribune.

FASHION NOTES.

Large tournures are shown in all the French fashion plates.

Embroidered China crape mantillas with lace borderings are among fall novelties for evening wear.

Changeable hosiery is among the novelties. Blue and gold, bronze and red, and red blue are favorable combinations.

Little white frillings are now put inside the capote bonnets that are so fashionable. They are of fine white lace, and are very becoming to most faces.

One of the latest novelties in bonnet trimmings is a curled feather, shot as it were, with mother-of-pearl tints in all shades. Small artichokes are also used with small leaves of velvet.

Little veils of colored illusion are still worn over the face. They reach to the end of the nose. When placed over bonnets and hats they are drawn up neatly in the back and tucked underneath the brim.

The argossy glove fastens with a lace tipped tassel, which is held with a spring clasp so that the lace need only be drawn to fasten the glove without tying or any trouble while the tassels prove most effective finish.

Necklaces of Florintine and cloissone beads showing a surface of pale mauve, rose and green, shot with gold, are very popular. Some of the most expensive kinds are incrusted with tiny dots and stars, which sparkle like gems under the gaslight.

Suits with short trousers put on boys seven or eight years of age are made of rough Scotch goods in cross-bars of gray, blue and stylish yellow-brown shades, also French cassimeres of blue green checks, and Scotch homespuns that have a melange of colors and very rough surface.

Youths in their teens put on long trousers and have a distinctive style of dress until they are seventeen. They wear cut away jackets with the Derby back, that is defined by two buttons and an open lap on the middle seam, or else the broad English back forms are used with slits up two of the seams. For their best suits of crepe cloth or diagonals these coats fasten by three buttons, curve away to show the vest beneath, and have pockets with flaps; the collar is rolled, but the vest has no collar; the trousers may have binding down the sides. Their every suits of Scotch cheviots have the fronts fastened lower by five buttons.—[Harper's Bazar.

Beautiful Blonde—"Yes, I have noticed that. I wonder why it is."

Beautiful Brunette—"Cold weather does not redden a brunette's nose."—[Philadelphia Call.

How Watch Cases are Made.

The many great improvements introduced in the manufacture of the Jas. Boss' Gold Watch Case, have led to similar improvements in the making of silver cases.

Under the old methods, each part of a silver case was made of several pieces of metal soldered together, requiring a great amount of cutting and soldering, which softened the metal and gave it the pliability of lead rather than the elasticity of silver.

Under the improved methods, each part of the Keystone Silver Watch Case is made of one solid piece of metal hammered into shape. The advantages are readily apparent, for every one knows that hammering hardens the metal while soldering softens it.

To test the superiority of the Keystone Silver Watch Case, take one of 3 oz. weight, press it squarely in the center when closed, and it will not give, while a case of same weight of any other make will give enough to break the crystal. The Keystone Silver Watch Case is made only with silver cap and gold joints.

Send 3 cent stamp to Keystone Watch Case Factories, Philadelphia, Pa., for handsome Illustrated Pamphlet showing how Jas. Boss' and Keystone Watch Cases are made.

Our Wives of Long Ago.

BY GEO. SWARTHOUT.

There are smiles of such exquisite meaning,
And voices like music that flow,
Only seen, only heard when we're dreaming,
Of the wives that we wed long ago.

Where are they; those once so loved faces?
Through the mist of long years how they glow
Alas! Time has left his sad traces
With the wives that eloped long ago

As the leaves by the blast they are scatter'd;
Some are sleeping the green sod below,
Some by false hopes are wasted, shatter'd
Are the wives we divorced long ago.

The charms that bewitch'd us departed
(They were fleeting as roses that blow)
With the song and the laughter, light-hearted,
Of the wives that "went back" on us so long ago,

We gaze with a sigh upon faces
That with youth still seductively glow,
As we fancy we read in them traces
Of the wives that "eloped" so long ago.

Though our hearts may be hardened and colder,
And our locks may be sprinkled with snow,
May a spark in our bosoms still smoulder
For the wives that we loved long ago.

MY WEDDING.

How cupid managed to send Stephen Barker after me I never could find out; but that is between themselves and is none of my business. A man good enough for Elizabeth and Janet, and all such ornaments to their sex, to lay his honest heart at my foolish little feet! I own that for a day or two the honor almost turned my head.

Then I began to consider. I had loved Norman Strong ever since I could remember, and Norman had been my friend when no one said a kind word to me. The case stood thus: I was an orphan, left to the care of an uncle and aunt remarkable for that kind of propriety that wins our admiration and awakens our hearty desire to get away from it. I had a small fortune of $25,000; that is, I was to have it if I remained unmarried until I was thirty-five, or, if I married before, with my uncle's approval.

Now, uncle did not approve of Norman. In fact, uncle never approved of any one that I liked. But with Stephen Barker disapproval was out of the question. Stephen was the great man and the good man of our small town. To have insinuated that Stephen was not worthy of a saint, a beauty and an heiress united, would have been a heresy seriously affecting my uncle's social and commercial standing. Stephen Barker's offer was therefore accepted, and the next Sunday we walked to church together.

After this public avowal of our intentions the marriage was considered inevitable by every person but me. I must do myself the justice to state that I never regarded my engagement to Stephen seriously; it was part of a plan to secure my happiness and rights. And as Stephen fully coincided in it, I do not expect censure from any one else.

I think it was no later than the third day after Stephen had spoken to my uncle that I frankly told him I thought [illegible] not to marry him. He asked me [illegible] and I said: "All my life long, [illegible], I have been a crushed un[illegible] girl. I have been afraid to speak, [illegible], or sing, and no one but Nor[illegible] Strong ever said a kind word to me [illegible] you came."

[illegible] you love Norman?" he asked [illegible].

[illegible] answered, "Yes, I love him, and [illegible] me, and when he got the position of cashier in your bank, he wanted [illegible] me; but uncle said we were [illegible] us to be trusted with my [illegible].

[illegible] you have $25,000?"

[illegible] left me that much; but Uncle [illegible] keep it until I am thirty-five, [illegible] to please him, or unless [illegible] of my good sense that [illegible] give it up to me. He [illegible].

[illegible] a long time, and [illegible] "You are a [illegible] honest with me. If [illegible] do you think you [illegible] Norman to help me." [illegible] for a walk. Norman came to see us occasionally on a Sunday night, and my aunt said he had really behaved with more good sense than she expected. I think she thought that if I married the banker, it might not be a bad thing for my Cousin Malvida, who was very plain, to marry the banker's cashier.

Everything went on with the greatest propriety. I had announced my intention to have an extraordinary trousseau, and this being a point on which aunt could feel with me, the next four months were pleasantly spent in shopping and sewing. Never in our little town had there been such dozens of elegantly-trimmed undergarment, such lingerie, such hosiery, such morning dresses and evening costumes, such wonderful boots and slippers and jewelry. We held little receptions every afternoon a month before the wedding, and my wardrobe was laid out in the best bedroom for comment and inspection.

It was about this time that Stephen Barker said to my uncle; "I understand Francis has $25,000. I wish her to have it so settled on herself, and for her own absolute use, that I propose, Mr. Miles, if you are willing, to add $10,000 to it, and buy for her the Stamford estate. It is only three miles from here, the house is a very fine one, the land excellent, and then, whatever changes come, it secures her a competency, for as soon as the railway is finished it will be worth double. What do you say?"

"I think your offer extremely generous, Mr. Barker, and of course for such a purpose I am willing to hand over to you at once Frances' fortune. The interest has been applied to her own use always. Will you look at the accounts?"

"Your word is sufficient, Dr. Miles."

So in about two weeks the transfer was safely and amicably effected, and Stamford Hall and estate were firmly and surely made over to Frances Halliday, spinster, for her and her heir forever. I must state here that I opposed as I thought right Stephen's gift of $10,000, and his subsequent outlay of $1,000 on furniture; but both uncle and aunt said that the settlement was small enough for a man of his means, and that it would be affectation to oppose it. And really Stephen managed the whole affair with such fatherly kindness and thoughtfulness that I could not bear to oppose him.

At length the wedding day drew near. It had been arranged for Wednesday morning, and we were to leave for New York immediately after the ceremony. Cousin Jose, who had prepared himself to look down on all the world from the pulpit, was to perform the ceremony.

This showed in Jose a very forgiving spirit, seeing that he had once looked on me and my $25,000 with affection, and I had not apprectated the honor. However, he forgave me at this interesting epoch, and came benignly to bless my adventure. He brought me as a present a black onyx seal-ring, on which was set a cross in seed-pearls. He had offered me it once before, with his affections and his manse, and I had then refused it. I took it this time.

It helped to swell the list of my presents, and they certainly made a goodly show. First there was the Stanford estate from my father and Stephen Barker, and the settled bills for $1,000 worth of new furniture which Stephen had sent to make the old rooms pretty and comfortable. Uncle gave me a set of silver and aunt some fine china, both of which gifts I took care to send to Stamford before my wedding day. My cousins and aunts and friends gave me all sorts of knick-knacks, and these I carefully packed in the half dozen trunks which were already corded and directed two days before the marriage day.

For Stephen had proposed to send all trunks to our New York hotel two days before we left in order that we might have no concern about them, and that I might be sure to have all I wanted on my arrival. I opposed this plan at first, but aunt said "it was eminently proper and thoughtful." So all my wardrobe except my wedding dress and a traveling suit arrived at the Fifth avenue Hotel, New York, on the last day of my maiden life.

Norman Strong called that night and was in remarkably high spirits. He wished me every happiness, and was very attentive to Malvina. Aunt thought his behavior charming—so unselfish—and I was also very well satisfied with it.

"I shall call you about 8 o'clock, Frances," said my aunt, as I bade her good night; "the hair dresser comes at 8:30."

I said, "Very well, aunt," and went to my room. The first thing I did was to pack my wedding dress in as small compass as possible, and then put on my traveling costume. This done I sat down in the dark. About 1 o'clock I heard the signal I watched for. I went softly down-stairs, unlocked the back door and walked out. Norman was there. We did not speak until we were outside the grounds. There a buggy waited, and we drove rapidly to a main line about three miles off. Here we caught the 3 o'clock express, and were safe in New York and very respectably married by 10 o'clock. My trunks, which had arrived the day before, were then redirected for Washington, and after a delicious little wedding breakfast—all by ourselves—we left for that city.

In the meantime there was trouble enough in Milford. Our flight was not discovered till near 9 o'clock, and then Uncle Miles sent word at once to Stephen Barker, [illegible] himself for that [illegible] My aunt and cousin's [illegible] were very [illegible] I [illegible] the [illegible] they [illegible] for all [illegible] told us to get all the pleasure we could out of it. We obeyed him implicitly.

During that month things settled down a little. I did not expect to be forgiven all at once, and I was not; but then I was in a position not to worry particularly about it. We returned very quietly, after dark one night, very much like two children who have played truant all day and creep home at nightfall with as little ostentation as possible.

But at Stamford Hall everything had been prepared for my comfort. The fires were blazing, the gas lighted and an excellent supper waiting. The next morning Norman went back to his desk, and Stephen took no more notice of his return than if he had never left it. People who had been speculating about his losing his position knew in five minutes that there would be no change. And every one took his tone from Stephen. We were treated very much like two children who had been forgiven, and whose fault was not to be thrown up to them.

That was the way the men took it, and Norman pretended to be satisfied. The woman acted with a great deal more intelligence. They all came to see me, and though I did not give them all credit for the very kindest of motives, I made them all welcome. I told them about my wedding trip, and showed them my new things and I dare say the men talked everything over with them afterward.

But what most puzzled everybody was that Stephen Barker came so often to see us, and was so friendly with Norman. Some thought it very mean-spirited in him, and others remembered that when he was very young he had loved my mother dearly. Even those who spoke kindly of him did not give him credit for half the noble unselfishness he had shown; for he would not let me tell any one that it was he himself who had planned everything about my property and my wedding.

"Just let them say you jilted me, Frances, if they please to do so. We know better, and we will keep our secret until Uncle Miles comes round."

Aunt and uncle both came round sooner than we expected. When it was known that Stephen spent so much of his time with us, Aunt Miles considered the advantage of having her daughters brought familiarly in contact with him, and for their sakes she came to see me and gave me the kiss of reconciliation.

But as far as catching Stephen's heart "in the rebound" was concerned, she was just a little too late. Norman's sister, who was a teacher in one of the pulic schools of New York, came to spend her vacation with us, and Stephen fell in love with her in a way that convinced me that his love for Frances Halliday had only been the shadow of the love he had for her mother. Why, Norman himself never behaved more foolishly about me than Stephen about this little plain Ruth Strong; for she is plain—every one must allow that.

And the preparations that are going on for the marriage quite amuse me, who might have been the banker's wife myself. Dear me, I think love must laugh at the kind of people he comes in contact with. But I hope Stephen will be happy; I do, indeed.

That is all I have to say about my marriage. I think it was rather peculiar. Some women will doubtless say they don't believe such men as Stephen exist. But let a girl, when she discovers she does not like a man, tell him so, and ask his advice and help, and ten to one she will find another Stephen. How can men be chivalrous and self-denying if women don't give them opportunities? I think that is wrong, and I intend to give Norman every chance to cultivate such noble qualities.

The Result of a "Personal."

A funny story is told of a lady who was foolish enough to answer a "personal" in a daily paper which stated that a young man was desirous of making the acquaintance of a young woman, with a view to matrimony. She carried on a long correspondence with the advertiser, taking, however, the precaution to have her letters copied by a confidential friend. She always sent the copies and retained the originals. Her answers came regularly, but her correspondent was quite as conscious as she was herself, for he always employed a type-writer, and she had no means of becoming familiar with his hand writing. Finally, after a good deal of gush, a meeting was agreed upon between the pair, and the lady was somewhat surprised, when she arrived at the place appointed, to see her brother, wearing in his button-hole the flower which was decided upon as the means of identification. They both acknowledged their folly by indulging in a hearty laugh and went home together, fully resolved to have nothing to do with these traps to catch the unwary, called "personals."

Retiring From Business.

"Yes," he remarked to his friend, "since I——"

"Telegram, sir," interrupted his clerk. "Wabash up one point."

"Wire Smith to sell 10,000. As I was about to remark, since I——"

"Another telegram, sir," again interrupted the clerk. "Union Pacific is down three points."

"Order Smith to buy 3,000. Yes, since I——"

"Mr. Wilson wants to know whether you will be at the bank meeting this afternoon," interrupted the clerk for the third time.

"I'm going down at once, tell him. As I was about to say," he continued, "since I retired from active business I have never felt better in all my life."—[New York Times.

FASHION NOTES.

Ecru, drab and brown are the colors most used in felt hats.

Breakfast caps are made of embroidered net and have square crowns.

Black stockings are worn on all occasions, by both ladies and children.

Folds inside the collar and sleeves of dresses rival the frills so long used.

For midwinter, fur bands and entire brims will be used on cloth and velvet bonnets.

Iron rust brown is a new applicant for public favor, and promises to rival gray and beige.

Feathers covered with gold dust are seen among the early importations for the fall season.

Maderia embroidery and guipure, white and ecru, are largely used on the dresses designed for little ones.

Turn down cuffs and collars of pure white velvet are worn with dark cloth dresses a pretty effect.

Red vests, embroidered in gold and silver, are worn with house dresses of black, gray, navy blue and brown.

The heavy French or English cotton stockings, when of black or dark colors, now comes with white soles.

Open designs of embroidery are much in favor for linen collars, extending along the edge and coming down each side of the front.

Pale blue add olive green is a fashionable combination for evening dress, but it takes a French dressmaker to harmonize the colors.

Silver bar pins, with a tiny pistol at one end, are among the newest designs in jewelry. A little Rhine stone is placed over the muzzle.

The novelty for dress bonnets is the entire bonnet made of white Angora lace in which many gold or silver threads are interwoven.

Combinations prevail for bonnets as well as dresses and cloaks, almost all bonnets except those of felt being made of two materials.

Uncut velvet ribbons are used on very rich bonnets, and are most effective when made up in bows of short loops and with notched ends.

Velvet bonnets left over from last winter, if defaced by snow or rain, can have the spots hidden by sewing on beads in dots, branches or crescents.

In many dresses a fold of red or pale yellow velvet is basted inside the collar, and sometimes extends down the front beyond the edge of the buttons.

Young girls' evening dresses are preferred in cream white mull with trimmings of mull embroidery, lace, satin or velvet ribbon bows, and are made in a simple girlish manner.

The small capote, the slightly larger bonnet with a coronet or a pointed brim, and the small fish wife poke, are the three shapes that have thus far found favor for autumn and winter bonnets.

General Beauregard on Jefferson Davis's Military Policy.

From General Beauregard's story of the Battle of Bull Run in November Century, we quote the following:—

"No people ever warred for independence with more relative advantages than the Confederates; and if, as a military question, they must have failed, then no country must aim at freedom by means of war. We were one in sentiment as in a territory, starting out, not with a struggling administration of doubtful authority, but with our ancient State governments and a fully organized central government. As a military question, it was in no sense a civil war, but a war between two countries—for conquest on one side, for self-preservation on the other. The South, with its great material resources, its defensive means of mountains, waterways, railroads and telegraph, with the immense advantage of the interior lines of war, would be open to discredit as a people if its failure could not be explained otherwise than by mere material contrast. The great Frederick, at the head of a little people, not only beat back a combination of several great material powers, but conquered and kept territory; and Napoleon held combined Europe at the feet of France till his blind ambition overleaped itself. It may be said that the South had no Fredericks or Napolons; but it had at least as good commanders as its adversary. Nor was it the fault of our soldiers or people. Our soldiers were as brave and intelligent as ever bore arms; and, if only for reasons already mentioned, they had a determination superior to the enemy's. Our people bore a devotion to the cause never surpassed, and which no war-making monarch ever had for his support, they gave their all—even the last striplings under the family roofs filling the ranks voided by the fall of their fathers and brothers. But the narrow military view of the head of the government, which illustrated itself in the outset by ordering from Europe, not 100,000 or 1,000,000, but 10,000 stands of arms, as an increase upon 8,000, its first estimate, was equally narrow and consequently timid in its employment of our armies. The moral and material forces actually engaged in the war made our success a moral certainty, but for the timid policy which—ignoring strategy as a science and boldness of enterprise as its ally—could never be brought to view the whole theatre of war as one subject, of which all points were but intregal parts, or to hazard for the time points relatively unimportant for the purpose of gathering for an overwhelming and rapid stroke at some decisive point; and which, again, with characteristic misselation, would push a victorious force directly forward into unsupported and disastrous operations, instead of using its victory to spare from its strength sufficient to secure an equally important success in another quarter."

PREPARATIONS for the World's Fair at New Orleans are progressing rapidly and everything indicates a great and successful enterprize. Already eight hundred carloads of goods have arrived and are hardly noticeable in the mammoth buildings. It is expected that five thousand carloads will complete the number.

DEFEATED candidates take up their old work—successful ones enter upon their new duties. Have neither pity for the one nor praise for the other. The official vote is not the true basis of man's happiness or unhappiness. He who looks for the goal of true happiness by living on popular favor misses the mark.

IT is reported that Gordon wrote a letter from Khartoom of Nov. 5th reporting himself safe and well. If true this will be good news to the world. Nations' eyes are being turned to that city of Africa. Gordon is an Englishman but he belongs to the civilized nations of the earth and lives in the hearts of all people.

MANY men live and die but little known and yet possessing the elements of greatness. Many men having few of the qualities of greatness are "made" great. These facts should not discourage. Life should not be spun out on the principle that all is vain unless we are known in proportion to our real greatness. There is a time in eternity when we will be measured in exact proportion to our worth.

REPUBLICANS journals as well as Democratic organs are inexhaustive in their suggestions as to who shall make up Mr. Cleveland's cabinet and what his future movements will be. Of course this is all very well, but Mr. Cleveland is capable and at the proper time will make his own selections if we judge him rightly. His time will be occupied for the present in the discharge of his duties in the gubernatorial chair.

ON the 2th of March next the terms of 25 United States Senators expire. Of these 14 are Democrats and 11 Republicans. Four Democrats have already been elected to succeed four Democrats from Louisiana, Kentucky, Maryland and Ohio. Senators Allison of Iowa and Morrill of Vermont, Republicans, have been elected to succeed themselves. The Senate will remain Republican by a small majority.

MR. CLEVELAND has been elected to become the chief magistrate of this government. As a free people we have determined the manner of electing a president. The week following Nov. 4th has been to us convincing argument of the strength of our Republican institutions. Charles C. Woods, of Pulaski, who kept a general store and lately failed, has confessed judgments to relatives for for $12,543. Unsecured creditors hold $20,000 of claims, $5,000 being by Syracuse firms. Dunn, Salmon & Co., Charles E. Crouse & Co., and H. O. Pratt are among the losers. It is said Woods had, at the time of his failure, goods in stock sufficient to meet the wants of a jobbing business, rather than the demands of a country retail store.

An Important Decison.

The general term of the Supreme Court of New York city has decided a a somewhat novel point in the law of marriage and divorce. In September, 1880, the wife of Constance Faber obtained a decree of divorce, in which the husband was forbidden to marry again. Nevertheless, Faber took to himself another wife in April, 1883, and was thereupon convicted of bigamy in the Court of General Sessions, and sentenced to the state prison. The general term now sets aside this sentence, holding that after the dissolution of the first marriage the relation of husband and wife no longer existed between the parties, and, therefore, it was not bigamy for either to marry again.—[Fulton Patriot.

Our neighbor, the Patriot, is mistaken in the above decision. The fact of the matter is, that in February 1882, the General Term of the Supreme Court in the city of New York made the above decision, and in 1883 the Court of Appeals [illegible]

Gen. Arthur has risen in public estimation ever since he became President. Up to that time he had been known as a superior politician, identified with the Stalwart faction, faithful to his friends, and faithful also to his enemies, though never violent or acrimonious. But now he is regarded as the best President who has been in the White House since Abraham Lincoln. He is moderate, conservative, dignified, judicious and patriotic.

We are not anxious to see Arthur elected to the Senate. In fact, so far as he is concerned, we should be glad to have him take his place here in New York again after he leaves Washington. He is a good lawyer, and would have a great advantage in coming back here to practice law.

There is a silly superstition that a man who has been President becomes to great and gorgeous to do anything within the sphere of ordinary usefulness afterward. On this theory Mr. George Jones of the Times raised a big fund to help out Gen. Grant a few years ago, and through the liberality of Mr. Jay Gould he filled it up to handsome proportions. We are sorry to say that since then Jones has treated Gould with anything but the consideration which such munificence was entitled to from a benificiary; but that is their affair and not ours.

This, however, has nothing to do with the preference that President Arthur should come back here to New York and take his turn along with the rest of us, the workingmen of the metropolis. That is the right sort of thing for a retiring President to do; and up to the present time the right sort of thing is what Arthur has generally done.—[New York Sun.

General E. W. Leavenworth of Syracuse was united in marriage Tuesday at Bergen Point, N. J., to Mrs. Harriet T. Ball of Bergen Point. The bride is the widow of the late Hon. Alexander M. Ball of Elizabeth, N. J. The general is 81 years of age. He studied law with William Cullen Bryant in Great Barrington, Mass., in 1834. He was elected Secretary of State in 1853 and served two terms. He was a member of the forth-fourth Congress.

John Garfield formerly lived in Oswego. He had been a manufacturer of silverware. He married Miss Fannie Hammond, and they moved to Brewerton, Onondaga county. From there they went to Europe, and finally settled in Naples. Four children were born to them. In July last Garfield died, and his family returned to Brewerton. Mrs. Garfield knew nothing about her husband's affairs, altho' he had always supported her and the children in comfort. Lately she was agreeably surprised on being notified by her husband's agent that he had left property in New Haven and Albany valued at $100,000.

In Flemmington, Pa., Friday, a fire broke out in the lumber mill yard of Kreamer, Mann and spread to the county bridge over the Bald Eagle creek, destroying the structure and the stables of Hays & Co. There were 8,000,000 feet of lumber consumed. Loss $200,000.

Several weeks ago John Downey and wife, of Windsor, Ont., being destitute, mutually agreed to drown themselves in the river. The wife did so, but the husband's courage failed him. He was arrested for murder when the wife's body was found, but discharged upon the true facts coming out. Friday, Downey fulfilled his death contract by hanging himself.

Minister Morton sails from New York for France Wednesday. His leave of absence has not yet expired, but he considers it proper to return to Paris as quickly as possible to minister to the wants of Americans residing there during the cholera epidemic.

Forepaugh's sacred white elephant died in Philadelphia Friday. Forepaugh says he loses $63,000 by his demise. "I will never buy another white elephant," says Mr. Forepaugh. "The people didn't appreciate the one I had, and they wouldn't appreciate another unless he was as white as snow." The body was sent to Dr. Boyd of Chicago, where it will probably be set in the Academy of Natural Sciences.

COUNTY COURT.—[illegible]

[Rochester Herald.]

"Five million dollars!"

"Yes, sir, five million dollars, of which two millions are spent for fireworks and three millions for uniforms etc. every Presidential campaign."

Thus said Mr. Jumps, the Rochester fireworks maker to our reporters inquiry.

"The average spent for fireworks in off years is over a million dollars."

"Do we import the bulk of our fireworks?"

"No, sir, we import nothing but firecrackers. We make the rest in this country. There are only ten fireworks establishments in this country."

Upon invititation of Superintendent Frederick Fits Flightner, the reporter inspected the Palmer establishment not without some fear and trembling at first When the superintendent said he had been blown up twice, the reporter furtively asked:

"Is not this business a little risky?"

"Yes, I suppose it would be so considered by outsiders, but I have encountered greater dangers than any I find here so I don't feel concerned."

"I don't quite catch your meaning?"

"Well, I have been in this business many years and the constant though unconscious nervous strain has caused greater sufferings than the explosions I have "taken!" Many a day I would be very dizzy, and every thing would get dark. At other times I could scarcely breathe from choking sensations. Then my appetite left me and I grew thin, weak and lifeless. I was drowsy by day and wakeful by night. My side pained me, my back ached, my limbs burned. I bloated fearfully and one leg became paralyzed. For ten months I suffered desperately, and two physicians gave me up for a dead man sure."

"You don't look it now?"

"No, that's so, but it was a fact just the same. When I found out my trouble I at once resorted to Warner's safe cure and a dozen bottles put me in possession of the best health I ever expected to enjoy, as I was pronounced incurably sick with bright's disease. It is the most wonderful medicine in the world."

"Indeed. You are a fortunate man. Is there any falling off in the fireworks business this year?"

"Not at all. On the contrary it grows more popular every year, and this year we have done an extraordinary business. The American people are getting quite as fond of display as the mercurial Frenchman and they manifest it by rockets and volcanoes, political banners campaign uniforms, etc. I reckon that $10,000,000 won't cover the incidental political expenses of the campaign."

CHEESE MARKETS.

The Utica Markets.

UTICA, Nov. 17, 1884.

Our market was again dull but steady at former prices. Considering the complaints that have recently been made, we should say that cheese sold remarkably well to-day. Everybody knew what it was—the make of the middle and latter part of October, skimmed in the cans; yet it sold quieter as well as the stock offered for two weeks past, altho' there was not quite so much of it. In fact a number of factorymen went home without selling at all, having forwarded last week about all they had that was ready to go. On the other hand, a few sold out their entire October make today. On several of the best lots there was a moderate amount of competition. If we were to judge from this part of the country we should say that cheese was getting pretty closely sold out; but we understand that in St. Lawrence and Jefferson counties there is plenty of it yet, and that the stock on hand runs back into August.

Transactions of the day were as follows: 97 boxes at 10¾c.; 2 lots, 200 boxes. at 11⅛c.; 35 lot, 3,121 boxes, at 11¼c.; 5 lots, 425 boxes, at 11½c.; 4 lots, 800 boxes, at 11⅝c.; 5 lots, 412 boxes, at 11¼c.; one lot, 600 boxes, August and September makes, at 11⅞c; and 3 lots, 504 boxes at private terms. Sales, 5,688 boxes; commissions, 550; total 6.238 boxes. Ruling price, 11¼c. Transactions a year ago were 8,511 boxes; two years ago, 5.790; three years ago, 8,107. For two years past the ruling price has been 11½c.; but in 1881 it was only 11c.

AT FULTON.

The cheese market for this season is drawing near to a close. It is probable that but one or two meetings more will be held. The market has been rather slimly attended this season and it is predicted that a reorganization of the Fulton dairymen's association will needs be perfected next season in order to insure successful and profitable results. A lack of interest has been manifested by salesmen this season that promises to result in a disbandment of the present association. Unless a more thoroughly organized association is made and a new system adopted we fear a failure of our present market. Fifteen factories were represented Monday evening, offering twelve hundred boxes of cheese which sold at Utica ruling, 11¼. Hoose and Osborn bought the bulk.

All households will be made happier by keeping up with THE FULTON TIMES.

She Moralizes on Election—Is Hopeful of the Future—Hazing—Ned Loves Her Still, &c.

And Sampson awakened out of his sleep, and went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web.—Judges, XVI chap.

The green earth sends her incense up,
From many a mountain shrine:
From folded leaf and dewy cup,
She pours her sacred wine.
—Whittier.

Ned and I feel that we were not born a minute too soon, nor could we wish to have been earlier born, for the year of jubilee has continued its red lights and the band has never ceased to play. A life spent in the dye house or at the monotonous and clacking loom need not be a dull and unpoetical one, if we read all that lies hid amid the countless threads of web wool. Sampson himself did not sleep in vain, for with garnered strength he awoke with newness of life and showed his oppenents and persecutors that he was in the weaving business and knew when his "cut" was out. Sampson knew something about "hazing" and tricks on hollow eve night, for did he not when in the city of Gaza "arise at midnight and take the doors of the gate of the city, and the two posts, and went away with them, bar and all and carried them to the top of an hill, &c.?"

Weaving, dyeing and deviltry, says Ned, are not among the lost arts. There has been much hard work out of the factory for Ned and I. We have discussed the issues of the political campaign just ended, until there is not an explosive monysyllable or dissyllable or a handful of mud on Broadway but what has been hurled at each other's head. Ned has since election, taken his hands out of the dye vat, and I have stopped the loom, that we might dispassionately look in one another's eyes and realize what asinine bipeds we had been. I was a follower of Blaine, Ned of St. John, our oldest daughter's husband who lives near Ingalls Crossing is a Cleveland man, so we are quite a good deal split up on the political question. I said to Ned, "why do you waste coloring material and labor on a web of cloth you cannot dye;" throwing away a ballot by voting for St. John? I saw by Ned's eye he was yankee like about to answer me by asking another question; Martha, said he, "I can begin to color one end; and twenty-five thousand yards of material in 'fast colors' that withstood a tempest from campaign orators and newspapers in this State, need not if true to principle be alarmed at the pagan molochs and smoking effigies since the election.

Now Martha, please tell me why you do not put the filling of the whole web in your bobbin and in the shuttle at one time and by one whack of the 'picking stick' place it in the warp? Or is public sentiment best and most permanently made, one thread at a time, and thus re-enforcing and supporting its predecessor until the 'cut' is completed?"

"Now Ned, that is one of your old sentimental send offs; why did not you wait another four years, not now when you had a choice between the two great parties? You know you could not elect St. John, and you should have chosen the least of two evils?

This looks like a hard question even for an 'end man' and I feel that you will have the last word if this controversey were prolonged to Christmas, but I will ask you another one, which you will not charge with being overloaded with the luxury of romantic sentiment. What is the sense of standing behind two vicious mules, be they ever so venerable, who have kicked their stalls to kindling wood and their hind shoes are flying in the air; while the wide world lies before you, and you have the use of your limbs and a city of refuge which a third party is building, known as moral suasion and prohibition is not far away?

Ned I would just like to know what is the use of voting for somebody you cannot elect? There is one thing we can do, we can vote against the 'no-license' excise commissioner next spring and all this temperance business!"

"Why Martha, since you have joined the Chautauqua circle you overwhelm me with words and talk like Salarino and Shylock; Says Salarino, "Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh; What's that good for? Shylock;—To bait fish withal; if it will feed nothing else, it will feed my revenge."

Now Ned, life is too brief to devote all our hours out of the mill, to have "our own sweet will," *when so large an aver*age of uncultivated opportunities lie round us. I will go to my loom once more and hopefully, cheerfully watch the flying shuttle, and the growth, thread by thread of my web; remembering that life itself is only the aggre*gate of little things, and the poet has* well said:

"The green earth sends her incense up,
From many a mountain shrine;
From folded leaf and dewy cup,
She pours her sacred wine."

"Martha," said Ned, "*you are my lov*ing spouse and 'with all thy faults I love thee still.' I will too, now go to the dye house and put a whole cask of logwood in the vat and use a mordant so penetrating and effectual that there shall be no 'wrong side' to the fabric."

MARTHA.

Friday night the locomotive Wyoming, which was standing near the treetle on the D. L. & W. yards in Oswego with no one on board suddenly started ahead. Before it had gone far it collided forcibly with one of the shutes and the headlight of the locomotive was smashed in and the cab was badly wrecked. It is said that the damage will amount to $500.

All sorts of costumes at Howe's hall next Wednesday evening—except Mother Hubbards.

The third reception of the "Trash" club will occur at the residence of M. A. Stewart, this evening.

E. P. Barrett, of Hannibal, has been elected chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and H. D. Nutting, clerk.

The little friends of Miss Josie Bennett are celebrating her tenth birthday this afternoon at her home on Cayuga street.

School will close on Wednesday next, on account of Thanksgiving and will not open until the following Monday.

A dispatch from Fulton to the Syracuse Herald says: It is said that Miss Nellie Jones, a former well-known Fulton lady, is soon to be married to Doctor Tanner, the faster.

The Whitehall Times came to us last week printed in red ink, so enthusiastic was its editor over the election of Cleveland & Hendricks. The paper was no doubt re[a]d with much interest.

How beautiful were the days that closed the last and opened this new week. To a nation storm tossed by political excitement they seemed liked the calm that soothes to quiet.

We are very sorry to have disappointed many of our friends last week by not having papers sufficient to meet the demand. We printed a large number of extras but not enough. We shall try to calculate better hereafter.

A northwestern clergyman is reported as having said to a newspaper reporter; "You newspaper men must have queer views of things. You are always looking on and never taking part. I suppose, now, your idea of the day of judgment is that you will have a table off at one side, and report the proceeding for the morning paper."

An exchange thus poetically does the rink business: "If all of life could be as smooth as roller skating in the rink, no charm would be required to smooth the many ills from which we shrink; mankind might glide through life in peace, unmindful of the bitter fates, and all things move as slick as grease—as smooth as life on roller skates.

The Semi-Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Union of the Oswego Baptist Association will be held with the Baptist church at Pulaski, Wednesevening, Dec. 3d, and Thursday, a. m. Dec. 4th. Miss Rathbun a returned missionary, will address the Union Wednesday evening. It is also expected that Mrs. O. W. Gates, of Newton Centre, Mass., will be present.

On Friday evening next Diacount & Lumbury, fancy and acrobatic skaters, will make their appearance at the rink. The Oswego Times of yesterday says: There was a good attendance at the Columbia rink last evening, the attraction being the two Norwegians Diacount and Lumburg who gave a very satisfactory exhibition and received great applause.

The employes of Herrick & Emerick's box factory showed their esteem and good feeling toward their foremen by presenting them each with an elegant present last week. Thomas Fuller, foreman on the first floor was given a Mereschaum pipe, worth six dollars, and G. A. Burtch on the second floor received a gold-headed cane, costing eight dollars. These gentlemen go to Oswego to act in the capacity of foremen in the fine new factory.

Mrs. Grundy's Convictions.

I thoroughly believe in acting up to to one's convictions.

I have strong convictions on at least one subject and know that they are shared by multitudes.

It is my conviction that, considering the make, the fit and the price of ready made clothing, Kent & Miller are not excelled anywhere in or out of Central New York.

It is my conviction that more wear and tear, more comfort, more pleasure and more genuine satisfaction can be gotten out of an overcoat or suit of clothes from 18 and 20 South Salina street than from any other place. That is why my husband, my boys and my friends all buy clothing of Kent & Miller; and if it were my privilege to wear the bifurcaled habiliments of the nether limbs in my household, I should most certainly obtain the necessary garment of Kent & Miller, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

Jury Drawing.

The following list of trial jurors to serve at a term of the County Court to be held at the Court House in the city of Oswego on Monday, December 1st, was drawn at the clerk's office Saturday morning:

EXCITEMENT ON ACADEMY STREET.

The Belva Lockwood Parade at Midnight—A Man With Full Cargo Makes Night Hideous.

Had the young man who courts his girl at the garden gate in the warm nights of summer and by the fire in November's Sunday eve, strayed up Academy street at the usual hour of his homeward wendings, on Sunday evening last he might have thought that Diogenes had come back from the shades to continue his search for an honest man. "There had been a sound of revelry by night." Mr. Lovejoy, was awakened by sounds as though persons were in the kitchen. Thinking that burglars were in the house the ladies hastily dressed and went to a neighbors house. In the meantime Mr. L. succeeded in bringing out Mr. Emerick with an Indian club, Mr. Morton with a revolver and Dr. Woodbury with a lantern. He then went after the night watch and during his absence the men named made a search for the cause of the unusual disturbance. With the Dr. and his lantern in the lead they soon found the man who had created the trouble, with all sheets in the wind. Officer Wilkinson arrived at this juncture and took the man to jail. The next morning he was arraigned before the police justice for intoxication and disturbance of the public peace, plead guilty, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $11 or be imprisoned 30 days.

Change of Managers.

The rink at this place has again changed managers, Mr. John Hadcock taking the place of Mr. Ruggles. Mr. Hadcock is affable and popular, and cannot help but make a success in the new enterprise. To manage a rink properly it requires as much judgment as in managing a first-class theatre. The people want good attractions, and at the right time. A system should be adopted and carried out. The rink properly warmed, and presenting a cheerful appearance, with good attractions, is as desirable a place as one cares to visit. We think Mr. Hadcock will make the right sort of a manager, and will give satisfaction. A portion of his time will be devoted to his business on First street. We wish him and the rink proprietors success.

Waited Twenty Years.

As the Democratic procession passed the residence of Willis Nelson last Wednesday night in honor of the election of Cleveland and Hendricks, Mr. Nelson celebrated the event by firing off some fireworks he had purchased to celebrate the election of the democratic candidate of twenty years ago. He of course was defeated and Mr. Nelson laid aside the fireworks deciding not to use them until the Democrats were victorious. The old fireworks were well seasoned and loomed up in fine style.

At The Rink.

Miss Zetta Page will appear at the rink this evening, wearing $5,000 worth of diamonds. Miss Page is considered the most elegantly dressed lady in the profession, and is pronounced one of the best lady skaters who has yet appeared before the public. We recommend all who can to visit the rink this evening and enjoy themselves.

New England Supper.

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 26th, the L. U. B. W. of Oswego Falls will give another of their popular entertainments—this time a New England Supper. Members of the society will appear in costume, each representing some character. All who attend may be sure of a pleasant time, if a good programme and a well loaded table will make it.

The evening was very pleasantly spent and refreshments were served in abundance. Mr. Richards was presented with an elegant easy chair as a souvenir of the event, by his wife.

John Pratt's residence on First street presents a fine appearance after the improvement recently made. The painting was done by W. B. Patterson, and is an excellent piece of work. New York, Nov. 17, 1884.

A verdict of $10,000 was awarded by a jury last week in the Superior Court of this city in favor of a lady of this city who was seriously injured and made a cripple for life by the falling of a register box, like unto all others used in a street railway car, striking upon her knee inflicting at the time a deep wound and which has since deprived her of the use of this limb. The company defended in a stubborn manner and has kept the matter in court for a long time, but at last it came to trial and the jury brought in a verdict of $10,000. Plaintiff's counsel was a former Fultonian, who commenced reading law with the late R. H. Tyler, and well known to some of the Fulton bar, Judge D. D. McKoon, 291 Broadway.

"CLEVELAND ELECTED."

The Tribune has finally hung out the Cleveland plurality, which the whole country has virtually conceded some days ago. An earlier announcement of this paper might have saved a good many of its readers from placing additional bets on Blaine; but the reasons given for delay are generally received as sufficient. The fact of Gov. Cleveland's election was conceded last week and causes no unusual stir or excitement. Business is again moving in its wonted channels, though in a slightly diminished volume. The leading question raised in political circles is who will be in the new cabinet? those nearest to the newly elected President insist he will give this question no thought until he lays down the gubernatorial office. Slate makers must wait. It is not known positively when Mr. Cleveland will resign the Governorship—doubtless about the 1st of January, so that his successor, the new Governor, can write a message on his inauguration—which lasts but a single year. It is presumed his staff will resign at the same time that he does.

THE CANDIDATES PORTRAITS.

Walking along Park Place our curiosity led us to enter the rooms of H. B. Hill's Sons, fine steel engravers, who were the makers of the accurate likenesses of the leading candidates which have appeared in every town and village. We inquired the number sold from the best steel plates and was answered about 40,000 of Blaine, and half as many of Cleveland.

THE BROOKLYN DIVINE.

In conversation with a prominent church member of Plymouth, we learned that the action of the "popular pastor" during the late campaign had divided his church and congregation into two classes. Beecher and anti-Beecher men, and that his last manifesto or announcement that "hereafter in national matters he was a Democrat" would not have a tendency to heal this diversion. It is undoubtedly the long forbearance and Christian charity which possesses the minds and hearts of this people that has led them to overlook the wild, not liberal orthodoxy of this once "great divine" but any one who looks beneath the surface can see that seeds of an early dissolution are sown and have already taken root, and in due time will bear fruit.

AUTUMNAL PLEASURES.

New York was seen moving moving toward the park at an early hour yesterday. The day was bright and beautiful and the strollers lingered among the fast browning fields at Central Park while a few took a hand at the reins behind fast horses upon Jerome avenue.

IN THE PARK.

The glory is fast departing, in company with the waning year. The trees look bare and unfriendly stripped of leaves. The turf has fully succumbed to the influences of frost and drought. The waters of the lake look cold and uninviting. The animals mused in their cages and seemed to be considering how they best could obtain overcoats and mittens for the frigid season. Indian summer will soon be gone and the park will nearly be closed for the season.

THE WEST SHORE.

The streets are filled with men carrying loads of attractive circulars for free distribution, concerning lower rates over the West Shore and on many prominent corners are offices where tickets and "cut rates" can be obtained. This road is determined to lead in low rates to Chicago and the West, and at the same time they offer the finest equipment. We hear a West Shore office is soon to be opened in Fulton.

Parish.

For the third time recently our place has been visited by burglars. Last Wednesday night, burglars entered the residence of G. B. Mosher, through the pantry window. They took a pair of trousers in the pockets of which was $160 in cash, also some silverware, and drank a lot of milk and sucked some two dozen eggs. They also stole a vest. There is yet no clue to the burglars. Mr. Mosher had the money paid him the day before.

Our cemetery is being enlarged again.

The large vote that J. S. Ludington received in this town for school commissioner was a surprise to our citizens.

We hope to see a large number of teachers from Fulton at our Institute, to be held here Nov. 24.

Farm Work for November.

Surface drains made in autumn carry off the excess of water during fall and winter months. They will also remove valuable fertilizing material, especially if well-decomposed manure has been applied as a top dressing to land. Deep open drains may be dug during late autumn. It is better to finish the work in a thorough manner as far as the drains go. A small part of a field, well drained, is better than half made ditches over a larger area. The great mistake in constructing drains is to partly dig them one season, with expectation of finishing the work at some future time.

Corn is husked with the greatest ease and comfort while in the field; if this work is done before the cold weather sets in. There are several devices for the fingers to aid in removing the husks. A very good husking-hook may be made from a piece of strap-iron, with leather loops for the fingers. A simple wooden peg is all that some good huskers wish. It is important to wash the hands thoroughly after each half day of husking, and use some substance to keep the skin soft and prevent cracking. An ointment made of two ounces of oil of almonds, half an ounce of spermaceti, one drachm of white wax, and one ounce of glycerine, may be prepared by any druggist, and is excellent for hands which have been roughened by cold weather and raw winds. If this or a similar ointment is applied to hands, warmed in at evening, and old kid gloves worn during the night the hands will be very much softened by morning.

Root crops should be gathered before the ground freezes. Mangels are more tender than turnips, and the latter may remain undug until there is danger of their being frozen fast in the soil. The tops make fine fodder for livestock when given with hay and grain.

Fall ploughing may be done so long as the weather will permit. Every acre turned in the fall helps forward the work of the busy months of spring. The effect upon clay soil is specially beneficial, making it more porous and facilitating important chemical changes. Fall ploughing is one of the best methods of eradicating cut-worms, wire-worms and many other insect pests, which pass the winter in the soil.—[American Agriculturist.

W. W. FARNSWORTH.

Potato Culture.—How to Produce a Maximum Yield of Potatoes Within Paying Limits.

IN RURAL NEW YORKERS.

This last sentence is of my own adding; for while it is very interesting and instructive to know how unusually large crops may be produced by extra effort; yet the generality of potato growers will not care to increase the yield beyond the point where an increase of one bushel, would cost more than a bushel is worth. Here the producer will stop, unless he is a philanthropist who is experimenting for the benefit of humanity, or is striving to "beat his neighbor." I place the Rural Editor in the first class, although I will not say that he has carried his experiments beyond the paying point. Potatoes can be profitably raised on a variety of soils, though my experience goes to prove that a sandy loam or gravelly soil is the most favorable. Whatever the composition of the soil, it must be thoroughly drained, either naturally or artificially, and it should contain sufficient humus to prevent it from becoming hard or sodden. These conditions are usually found in soils recently cleared, and while stumps and roots make the cultivation more difficult, the humus and potash deposited in the soil by the decay of leaves for ages past make a rich, mellow, lively soil, and the comparative freedom from weeds helps to make "new ground" desirable for potato growing. But we cannot always have a field cleared to order when we wish to plant a crop of potatoes, we are obliged to look somewhere else for our potato ground.

I have obtained the best success with clover sod. In sandy ground, I would spread twenty to twenty-five large loads of stable manure on the sod as soon after sowing as possible; then let the rains carry its fertilizing properties into the soil in solution, so that by the time we are ready to plow, the fertiliser is intimately commingled with the soil, more so than if applied as a top-dressing immediately after plowing; and, aside from this, the manure can be drawn at leisure times between haying and spring, (the sooner after haying the better;) whereas, the application of it after plowing, in Spring, consumes much valuable time when we can ill afford it. Wood ashes and superphosphates, however, I would apply after plowing. I would harrow in 50 to 100 bushels of unleached wood ashes per acre; where these cannot be economically obtained, potash in some other form can generally be used with profit. The clover sod will supply quite a quantity of potash—an element highly essential to the successful growth of [illegible]

[illegible] a larger yield per acre can be obtained from drills. The distance apart to plant, should be governed somewhat by the variety planted, strong-growing kinds requiring more room than others. I think a good general rule is to make the rows three feet apart, with two eyes on a piece. Should the soil be in a very high state of fertility, perhaps even less seed would be better.

I generally select smooth, even-sized seed, and use the entire potato; begin at the stem end, and cut from outside to the centre; following around the potato towards the seed end.

As to flat or hill culture, so much depends on the soil, season and variety, that it is very difficult to determine which is preferable. I usually hill mine moderately, with a winged shovel plow, which makes broad, flat hills; but in dry, Sandy soils, where the seed can be planted deep, and especially in dry seasons, it is not advisable to make much, if any hill; and if hilled at all, the hills should be broad and flat.

Lucas Co., Ohio.

Keeping Unprofitable Stock.

A serious loss in farming often results from stocking the farm with animals that poorly repay the cost of keeping. Few farmers are entirely exempt at some time from this kind of property, but it is, I think, much more carefully guarded against than it once was. Years ago, I can remember that all the farmers in my vicinity kept a lot of animals which I know must have been a source of constant loss. Of course, the cost of keeping was less in those days, or rather, I should say, was not then estimated as it should be. Cattle and other stock were allowed to run in pasture through the summer, and their owner thought all they increased in value was clear gain. There was a little more about winter feeding, hay and grain having a commercial value. But it was scarcely thought possible to make stock pay the cost of keeping, and this was rarely attempted. The only caution was not to stock too heavily, by which was meant not to keep more animals than the farmer could feed from home-grown produce without paying out money.

Western competition on lands much cheaper than our own has put an end to much of this reckless kind of stock-keeping, but there is yet far more of it than there should be. I think on grain-growing farms there is not the care in keeping only the best stock that there is where the latter is made a specialty. In a dairy district not many farmers will long keep cows so deficient in milk and butter production as are often found on farms where a mixed system of husbandry prevails; yet the dairyman may and often does keep inferior work horses. An old plug will do as well as any to draw milk. The result is that all his farm work is hindered and made more costly than it should be by inefficient team help. In fact, the rule appears to be in every avocation that the specialist in one thing shall be more or less deficient in every other. What money is made by the main farm operations is apt to be frittered away on the incidentals.—[Country Gentleman.

Enriching Worn-out Land.

C. W. Lansingburgh.—Is it practicable to restore fertility to valuable land that has been exhausted of potash, phosphoric acid or nitrogen, or all these? How can it be done, and what would be the approximate cost?

ANS.—This question opens up the whole subject of artificial fertilization. It may be that the land needs only potash or phosphoric acid, or nitrogen, or it may need either two or the whole three, so that no man can tell without experiment what it does need to restore its fertility. Of course, if it needs but one of these elements, and complete manure is applied, it would raise a good crop; but if any one, and especially the nitrogen, is already in the land in sufficient quantity, there would be a large needless expense for that ingredient. Much also depends upon the sort of land and the crop it is desired to grow as to what should be supplied. A crop of wheat or corn would need larger quantities of some and less of others of these substances than would peas, beans, or even potatoes. We should say, experiment on the land; apply to most of it—no matter what crop is planted—complete fertilizer of some make; that is, one containing all the elements mentioned. To a part apply plain potash manure, either the sulphate or muriate, as either may be bought so as to get the actual potash for the least money. To another part apply a plain phosphate, or very fine bone flour if it can be got; to another, nitrate of soda; to yet another, a mixture of these in different proportions. One such experiment will give more knowledge of this particular case than all the works written, and will inspire a taste for this sort of work, that will lead to more experiments in the same direction. But, that the experiment may be of the most use, a careful record must be made, and one sufficiently full, so that it may be thoroughly understood in after years whenever one may desire to refer to it. On land near any large city and good market, a judicious use of the fertiliser adapted to the land and crop can hardly fail to pay. For this particular case, we cannot prescribe from such meagre information. But in any case, don't throw away refuse, or waste good barnyard manure. That is the best manure wherever it can be made on the farm.—[Rural New Yorker.

The Ploughman says: There is no better time to trim apple trees than immediately after the winter fruit is gathered, and the leaves are, most of them, off the trees. There are many advantages of doing the work at this season; some of which are, the sap is comparatively inactive; therefore the wounds [illegible]

A dispatch from Elmira to the New York Sun, speaking of the possibility of Lieut. Gov. David B. Hill's succeeding Gov. Cleveland in the governorship, gives the following interesting account of that gentleman which we know to be true in every particular:

"Chemung county is rather proud of her son, David B. Hill. He came into Elmira some twenty-one years ago from a hamlet eighteen or twenty miles north of here, where he was born, and at once received the confidence and esteem of some of our best men. Ex-Speaker Maguire, who was also from the hamlet, said of him that he was a politician when he was a lad, and worked at the polls several years before he had a right to vote. G. L. Smith was County Judge when Gov. Hill came to Elmira, and he was so well pleased with the young man that one day after he had appeared before him he offered him an equal partnership, which was accepted, and the firm continued for more than ten years. Gov. Hill ranks high as a lawyer, and has managed many of the most important cases in this part of the State.

There is one peculiarity about Gov. Hill that has occasioned much comment, and that is his seeming aversion to the fair sex. A matronly lady said this evening to The Sun reporter that she remembered well when Mr. Hill first came to Elmira, a handsome, attractive young man, just in his majority. "We girls," she said, "girl like, tried all suitable means to become known to him and to attract him to our society, but without any success at all. It was reported to us that he had said he wouldn't have anything to do with women until he got rich, and although we redoubled our efforts it was all in vain. I don't know whether or not he's rich, but he keeps up his dislike to women all the same. He has never been in society in Elmira, although there has never been a time when the doors of the houses of the best people would not have been opened to him gladly."

Continuously for the twenty-one years since Gov. Hill has lived in Elmira he has taken his meals at the home of a lady who lives in a very modest manner on one of our principal streets. Her name is Mrs. Blackburn, and to hear her encomiums upon him one would be led to believe that he merited the distinction to which he has risen. The Governor has his bachelor apartments in the Chemung Canal Bank building, in which are the rooms of a number of other gentlemen, the whole block for this reason being called "The Saints' Rest." The Governor's apartments are three in number, and are elegantly furnished. Here he entertains his friends in a very royal manner. He has very many strong ones, for once attracted to him none can ever break away. One of them said to-day that Mr. Hill rarely spent anything on Mr. Hill. His habits are regular. You can set your watch by the hour that he goes up Lake street summer or winter, to his meals when he is in town, and he is rarely found elsewhere in business hours than in his office, or, in his leisure moments, in his rooms. His profession is his life; politics is his recreation. As some men spend money upon horses or dogs, or on books or pictures, Mr. Hill spends money in politics, and finds in it his recreation. He is fond of theatrical or minstrel entertainments, and one of his intimate friends said that he would rather hear Mr. Hill give an account of a drama than to witness it himself.

Mr. Hill has no family. His father and mother are both dead, the former since his election to the Lieutenant-Governorship, and he has no sisters living. The subject of the care of the Executive Mansion is one to which he said this evening he had given no thought. He is not very enthusiastic over his coming promotion. He likes the office of Lieutenant-Governor exceedingly, and would not have mourned, so far as he himself is concerned, if he had been allowed to remain in it. He has no high opinion of the Executive Mansion, and will take up his residence there with regret.—New York Sun.

The Hardest Part of The Work.

"Is that brake hard to handle?" asked a young man on the front platform of a Broadway car of the driver.

"No," responded that person.

"Is that whistle hard to blow?" again interrogated the the youth.

"No," gruffly responded the driver.

"What is the hardest thing to do on a street car?"

"Answering fool questions," replied the driver.—[Drake's Traveler's Magazine.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—About eight years ago I began to suffer from a Liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than calling it a "drawing in" sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to any business. This covered a period of a year.

Finally Mr Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your FAVORITE REMEDY as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found most decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without my former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot better express my approbation of Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to many of my friends and acquaintances.

Yours Truly, S. PEPSON.

How Watch Cases are Made.

In buying a silver watch case great care should be taken to secure one that is solid silver throughout. The cap of most cheap silver cases is made of a composition known as albata, which is a very poor substitute for silver, as it turns black in a short time. The backs of such cases are made much thinner than those of an all silver case, being robbed in order to make the cap thicker and get in as much as possible of the cheap metal. Another important point in a silver case is the joints or hinges, which should be made of gold. Those of most cheap cases are made of silver, which is not a suitable metal for that purpose. In a brief period it warps, bends and spreads apart, allowing the backs to become loose upon the case and admitting the dust and dirt that accummulate in the pocket. The Keystone Silver Watch Cases are only made with silver caps and gold joints.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Feb. 17, 1883.

In our long and varied experience in handling watches, we cannot but acknowledge and give our testimony that the Keystone Solid Silver Watch Cases are the best made to our knowledge. Having no soldering they remain homogeneous, harder and stiffer than they would be were they heated for soldering, and have more resisting power against pressure than any other cases in the market. ENDED IN SMOKE

I was sitting on the back porch of my vine-clad cottage this lazy May morning, puffing immense volumes of smoke from my old meerschaum pipe, undisturbed by aught save the chirping of the songsters of spring, and the cherry voice of my sister Bessie, as she goes singing about her household duties. I am thinking deeply—thinking of my pretty next door neighbor, Kittie American. She is a witching little girl, with the blackest of hair and the bluest of eyes. She does not look her age by five years, which her widowed mother innocently told me was less than my own by ten years, and I am turned thirty-five.

I have known Kittie nearly a year. I have ridden with her, and to-day, for the first time, the startling revelation has dawned upon my obtuse intellect that I am deeply in love with her. About fifteen months ago I came from the north, bringing with me my only sister, Bessie, and my cousin, Basil Willoughby, and settled down in Bonnie Brue, one of the picturesque little villages which comprise the suberban belt of Baltimore. Basil is a literary man and I am an artist. My sister keeps house for us two old bachelors, though the term can hardly be applied to Basil, for he is only a tall, slender stripling of twenty-four summers, as fair and delicate of feature as a girl; while I am dark, short, heavy set, weatherbeaten and fast growing gray.

I puff and puff until I have thoroughly made up my mind that to-day shall settle my fate, at least as far as Miss Kittie American is concerned. Carefully knocking the ashes out of my pipe, I arise and walk leisurely over to Mrs. American's. I find Kittie out in the yard busily engaged in weeding her flower beds and soiling her pretty fingers. She looks up with a sunny smile as she sees me, and exclaims enquiringly:

"Not painting this morning, Mr. Burroughs?"

"No, Miss Kittie," I reply, "I am suffering from an acute attack of spring fever, and have come to you for sympathy and consolation."

"I greatly fear that you have come to the wrong individual," she says, laughing merrily, "for I am going to ask you to turn gardener and help me to rid my flower bed of these horrid weeds."

"Let us compromise, Miss Kittie, by taking a stroll in the woods after wild flowers," I reply.

"Done!" she exclaimed as she runs into the house to get her bonnet; and soon we are strolling along together in the most contented manner possible.

I never noticed before how graceful her lithe, "petite" figure really is, how lustrous her eyes, or how tempting her rose-bud mouth, and I am seized with an almost uncontrolable desire to take her up in my arms and imprint a kiss upon it. What a vivid fool a man is when he has been badly bit! possessed a vestige of practical common sense of [illegible] the all absorbing passion did not [illegible] deprive him?

We stroll leisurely through the leafy woods, conversing on various topics of [illegible] and nature, culling wild flowers here and there, and finally when we have [illegible] Kittie seats herself on the trunk of a fallen tree, and I stretch myself indolently at length upon a downy bed of dry leaves. I wonder if I shall have the courage to carry out my original design and see over what I shall say and how [illegible] say it. I gaze at Kittie long and [illegible]. Although she is looking [illegible] way she must be aware of my [illegible], for presently she turns and [illegible]:

"Are you thinking of putting me on canvas, Mr. Burroughs?"

[illegible] was not, but indeed I [illegible] Kittie," I reply sarcastically [illegible] color [illegible]

"No, I think not," she answers pacidly.

"Then why can't you?" I ask calmly.

"Well, I have reasons."

"But what are they?" I query a trifle impatiently.

"Well, Mr. Burroughs, you are a great smoker, and I do detest smoking——"

"But why have you not told me so before this?" I exclaim, throwing away my cigar. "I had an idea you enjoyed seeing me smoke."

"Oh, I do like to see you enjoy yourself, but under certain circumstances it would be different, you know, having a smoky breath about one all the time," she replies, blushing vividly.

"Then I will give up smoking," I persist.

"I don't believe you can, Mr. Burroughs," saucily.

"Miss American, you are trifling with me," indignantly. "Kittie, will you be my wife if I promise you to abandon tobacco?"

"Y-e-s, when you have given it up for good and all," she replies doubtfully.

I attempt to ratify our bargain with a kiss, but she is too quick for me, and up in arms in an instant. Well, I can afford to wait. We slowly wend our way homeward, and I am feeling supremely happy, for is not my Kittie good as engaged to me?

I think it wisest to keep my heroic secret from Basil and Bessie, so I leave my pipe and pouch in their accustomed place.

"Fill up your old pipe and come out on the porch, Dick; I want to talk with you about the last scribble of mine," Basil calls out to me after supper.

But I curtly decline, greatly to his surprise, and seek the seclusion of my chamber, where I pace savagely up and down, trying to get the better of that insatiate appetite for the weed nicotian. I seek my couch early, but Morpheus refuses to be wooed. I toss, tumble, fret and fume, and finally, about 3 o'clock in the morning arrive at the conclusion that I love my pipe more fervently than I love Miss Kittie American. I steal cautiously down stairs, capture my meerchaum, and returning to my chamber I enjoy a long, lazy, delicious smoke.

Oh, drug more potent to soothe my fretful nerves than the far-famed narcotic of the Orient! I revel in one long, continuous dream of delight, but my appetite is no sooner satisfied than I am seized with terrible remorse. I have broken my promise, and have shown myself to be a miserable weak man. I sit upon the edge of the bed and calmly think the matter over; finally I arrive at the conclusion that stimulant must be opposed by stimulant and satisfied with this theory, I get into bed and fall peacefully asleep.

In the morning after breakfast I sally forth and procure a bottle of the best brandy I can find. This stuff, I agree, will drown my insatiate thirst for tobacco, as I am not in the habit of using stimulents of this character. I can easily dispense with it when it has accomplished my object. I take the liquor to my room and indulge in it more or less during the day. I astonish Bessie and Basil in the evening by appearing crabbed and sour and talk in a boistrous, incoherent manner.

I remain more or less under the influence of brandy during the whole week. I have so far realized my condition that I remain away from Mrs. American's entirely. Finally Basil tells me I am fast going to the bad, and Bessie implores me with tears in her eyes to save myself from certain ruin. I send for the doctor, who doses me with bromide and "fixes me up all right," as he terms it, and I—return to my pipe again. I go to see Kittie and expostulate with her; but it is all of no avail; she only replies to whatever I have to say:

"I told you I did not believe you could abandon it; you are too much its slave."

It is evident she despises me for being so weak. I return home heavy-hearted and despairing, and seeking solace and sympathy in my old meerchaum.

One morning a bright idea strikes me. I take my pipe and pouch and walk about three miles to the summit of a high hill, vulgarly called "Goose Hill." I sit down on an old stump, take a farewell smoke, deposit my pipe and tobacco on the stump and return home. I am sorely tempted during the day and during the night also, but I hold steadfast until the next morning, when my feet bear me against my will in the direction of "Goose Hill," and I fall from grace again.

Thrice in the space of three days I take that absurd journey, and then I give up. I go to Kittie and tell her candidly that I have over-rated my strength, that it is impossible for me to abandon the habit, that even the physician, on account of my intensely nervous organization, advised me not to attempt it unless I did so gradually, and that would be a matter of months, perhaps years, but she remains impregnable as far as argument is concerned.

"Why will you not adjure that absurd vow, dearest Kittie?" I exclaim. "I will not smoke in your presence any more than I do now, or not at all if you desire it."

"And why will you not abandon that absurd habit?" she answered me. "There is no earthly use in our arguing this question," she continued. "If you do not give up tobacco, you must give me up."

"Kittie, do you not love me?" I ask as a "dernier resort"—a final appeal to her heart and affections.

"You know I do, Dick," she confesses, the rosy color mantling her cheeks; "but if you love your nasty old pipe better than you love me, I can never marry you. My resolution is unalterable."

[illegible]

Before I can scarcely realize it I am on the cars, being whirled away toward New Jersey a disappointed lover and a disheartened consumer of the "divine plant." I reach my old home the following day and take lodging with my tenants. I revisit the former scenes of my childhood, wander aimlessly about the country, accomplishing nothing for the first two weeks; then I began to pick up and go to work in earnest; and thus three months slip away.

One sultry day in the latter part of August I receive a short letter from Bessie. My hand trembles and I pale a little as I peruse it. It contains the news of the approaching nuptials of my cousin Basil and Kittie American. Well, well, Basil is not a devotee of the weed, and take him all in all, the boy will doubtless make her a better husband than I ever could have been.

I sit in the last fading twilight, enveloped in a cloud of azure smoke, and I soliloquize thus, as I study the ever-circling rings:

"A pipe of tobacco is a man's greatest consolation, but can it ever compensate for the loss of a fair woman's heart?"

FASHION NOTES.

Repped fabrics are shown principally in Sicilenne, gros grain and Irish poplin.

Black Astrakhan cloth is much used in combination with woolen goods for dresses.

The new wool laces are used for trimming flannel petticoats both in white and in colors, such as scarlet, pale blue rose pink.

A new sort of ribbon is made to imitate a network of twine lace thrown on a satin ground and outlined with gold thread.

A pretty and inexpensive suit has a basque of velveteen or Jersey cloth, and the skirt of one of the fancy plaids now in vogue.

Riding stockings of crimson silk are manufactured especially for horsewomen. They weigh three ounces and a half, and are very warm.

Elegant black gros grain or faille dresses are now made with their only ornament pinked flounces of the material laid on pinked bands of velvet.

Sleeves are more trimmed than in several seasons, many having the old-time cuffs as a finish. Epaulettes also are worn, but should be adopted cautiously.

Expensive skirts have a flounce of embroidered flannel for the trimming, plainer ones have a wide hem with three or four tucks above done in stem-stitching.

Among new jerseys one is shown with the sharply-peaked vest fronts, and loose jacket opening over it, the latter closed with three or five buttons from the throat.

Cloth finished flannels are used for street dresses, made up with a little braid on the basque and apron, while the foot of the pleated skirt has a bunch of tucks or of braid above a deep hem.

Among cashmeres a novelty shows tiny silk figures in contrasting colors that are intended to be used for basques and mingled with skirt drapery, or as a polonaise, plain cashmere being used as the foundation.

Velvet waists for evening wear are made to fit as closely as a jersey, and are worn with skirts of corded silk in a lighter tint of the same color. The sleeves may be short or may meet the glove at the elbow.

Short dancing dresses for young ladies are cut in picturesque styles, copied from French portraits of the last century. Ribbons are used in profusion, a pretty fancy being that of thin gauze ribbons for bows on light China crepe or soft silk dresses.

Walking coats for small girls or boys from three to five years old, are made of plaid or striped cloths or flannel, in quaint, dull colors, with pleated back and front and a pointed hood lined with gay silk. They are worn with a light leather belt, usually of alligator skin, passed under the large box plaits. These coats are long enough to cover the dress beneath, and meet the black or dark wool stockings.

Never Shies.

"Now this old horse," said a gentleman who was about to purchase the animal from an honest old farmer, "is gentle, I understand?"

"Gentle as a dog."

"Never runs away?"

"Never."

"Never sees anything in the road to shy at?"

"Not a thing."

"Well, I'll take him."

When the gentleman went away, leading the horse, some one remarked:

"Ain't that the horse you usd to drive to town?"

"Same horse."

"Well he used to shy at everything he saw?"

"Yes."

"Well, don't he do it now?"

"Yes shies at everything he sees, but he don't see anything now. He's blind in both eyes."—[Arkansaw Traveler.

Ingersoll on Alcohol.

Colonel Robert Ingersoll was lately employed in a case which involved the manufacture of ardent spirits, and in his speech to the jury he used the following language:

"I am aware there is a prejudice against any man engaged in the manufacture of alcohol. I believe from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm in the distillery until it empties into the hell of death, dishonor and crime, that it is demoralizing to everybody that touches it, from the source to where it ends. I do not believe that anybody can contemplate the subject without being prejudiced against the crime. All we have to do is to think of the wrecks on either side of the stream of death, of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, of the destruction, of the little children tugging at the breast of weeping and despairing wives asking for bread, of men of genius it has wrecked, the men struggling with imaginary serpents produced by this devilish thing; and when you think of the jails, of the almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons and of the scaffolds on either hand, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against this vile stuff called alcohol. Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, and age in its weakness.

It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachments, and blights parental hope, and brings premature age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not strength; sickness, not health; death, not life. It makes wives widows, children orphans, fathers fiends, and all paupers. It feeds rheumatism, nurses gout, welcomes epidemics, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with misery, idleness and crime. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels and cherishes riots. It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victims to the scaffold. It is the blood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and the support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligations, reverences fraud, honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue and innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, and the child to grind the parricidal axe. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God and despises Heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perfidy, defiles the jury box, and stains the judicial ermine. It bribes voters, disqualifies votes, corrupts elections, pollutes our institutions and endangers the government. It degrades the citizen debases the legislator, dishonors the statesman and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; terror, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness and with the malevolence of a fiend, calmly surveys its frightful desolation, and unsatiated with havoc, poisons felicity kills peace, ruins morals, wipes out national honor, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin. It does that and more—it murders the soul. It is the sum of all villanies, the father of crimes, the mother of all abomination, the devil's best friend, and God's worst enemy."

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits. 27t4

TO OUR READERS.

TIMES readers, you all know that subscriptions for our paper are payable in advance. This is no formal expression, but to us an importhant factor. We shall devote all our time, energies and abilities to the editing of a paper of real merit. One dollar and twenty five cents is a small amount, but "many a mickle makes a muckle," and in our business the "muckle" comes from a close watching after the "mickles." Do not wait six months. The nights grow long, the fire low and the coal less. Come and see us; we are always willing to receive Christmas gifts at any time of the year. Do not wait for us to call—we despise cold formality. Besides people never seemed to appreciate our visits. Our shadow seems to make them shrink worse than would the ghost of Banquo. Let us see your genial face and shining dollars.

THE Lieutenant-Governorship question has settled down apparently to this outcome: When Mr. Hill takes his seat as Governor, there will be no Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. McCarthy will remain President pro tem of the Senate, only, and the board of trustees of public buildings will have only Governor Hill and the Speaker of the Assembly as its active members.—[Albany Times [Dem.]

IT is with a feeling of deep regret that we learn of the suspension of the Princeton Review. There has probably never been another periodical published in America of so much real worth. It was distinctly American in the treatment of its subjects. Its writers were Americans. It was seldom that the name of an author was appended to an article in its pages that had not already ranked high in the literary world. Its endeavor was present to its readers important questions of the day discussed by the American thinkers. It was the standard and representative of our periodical literature and ranked equal to the English periodicals. It did much to relieve the sting of that English remark—"that Americans were prolific in writing trash but were incapable of treating important questions with depth of thought, or of adding anything of real worth to that style of literature." It is a real loss; we are weak in that field of writing. It grates upon our ear to be told that in these vast United States hundreds of story papers, filled with sentimental, trashy, sensational stuff, by fourth rate authors, attain enormous circulations, and that these proprietors grow rich, while a periodical published only six times a year and at the cost of two dollars per annum, because it only published articles of real merit, could not live in this vast Republic. Our sensational story papers occupy one plane, our newspapers another, and they are most read. Our monthlies stand upon another level. They are interesting and instructive, but it does not require much thought to comprehend the subjects treated. Then comes our Review, with articles that require deep thought to fully understand and appreciate them. We dislike to feel that in this great nation there is not sufficient support to maintain a periodical devoted to the highest fields of thought.

TO-MORROW we are to put aside business and its cares and render thanks unto Him who giveth, for His bountiful mercies. The seasons have come and gone; we have tilled and sown and cared for and reaped. His kindness has watched over all things, and the harvest has been rich. Last year our country suffered from the unusual rainfall, but the nation prospered and we had many things for which to be thankful. But this year has been to our county a year of remarkable prosperity; crops have been large; The harvests have been great, the season has been one of unusual moderation. The sunshine and the rain coming as though at the bidding of our people. Merchants have prospered, business increased. There has been plenty of work for all who were willing to work and the wages good. Other sections of our county have prospered equally well. Oswego city has received quite a boom, and everywhere there are indications of thrift and activity. As a nation we ought to feel profoundly thankful for the year of magnificent progress. Everywhere this year the agriculturist rejoices in a fruitful harvest. On many articles of common use the tariff has been lowered, and on many articles of home production prices have been lowered. Our exports have increased materially. We rightly merit the world's appellation of America the fruitful. Our country has just succeeded in making an advantageous treaty with Spain—such an one as England has been trying to make for years, but has failed. It will [illegible] bind us in closer relations, and be of general benefit. But of all the things [illegible] we may feel [illegible]

[illegible] keeps alive party strife. The struggle is ended. Now let us all add our help to pave smooth the path of the wheel of government. There is no quicker way of creating strife than by talking, acting, and preaching strife. There is no surer way of attaining peace than by talking, acting and preaching peace.

We are asked to believe that Cleveland and Hendricks are at varience. When we know this to be a fact it is time to talk such stuff. We certainly hope that in this locality we shall not be obliged to hear of petty factional strife, nor hear the sneers of partizans at each other. We ask our readers not to indulge in this cheap and unworthy talk about politics and local office seekers. Do not countenance it, let us have it said that in Fulton we were free from the useless, senseless talk and jeers and ill feeling usually the consequent of a presidential campaign.

MRS. VICTORIA HULSKANEP the beautiful and accomplished daughter of the millionaire Morrison has appeared on the concert stage in New York City. There are many qualities of this lady that have endeared her to American hearts and yet filled them with sympathy for her. Her marriage with a coachman far beneath her station in life—and the many annoyances and perhaps heart repentances she has suffered from such a misguided union, have made us feel for this lady both regret and pity.

It is said the demand is far in excess of the supply.

Why the "Royal" is the Best.

The improved method of which it has been made possible to produce pure cream of tartar, has had an important bearing upon the manufacture of baking powder. By the process heretofore generally employed, it has been found impossible to remove all impurities, more particularly the tartrate of lime, which remained to such an extent as to greatly impair the quality of the cream of tartar, and to interfere seriously with the strength and wholesomeness of the baking powders into which it entered.

In the new process, which is owned by the Royal Baking Powder Company of New York, and exclusively employed in its extensive tarter works, the imported crude grape acid is so treated as to remove all vestige of tartrate of lime or other impurities, giving a product before unknown—a chemically pure cream of tartar.

By the employment of these superior facilities, the Royal Baking Powder Company has made the Royal Baking Powder, as the chemists all certify, of the highest possible degree of strength, "absolutely pure" and wholesome, and with an always uniform leavening power. It is for these reasons that the "Royal" never fails to produce bread, biscuits, cakes, etc., that are light, sweet digestible and wholesome; the eating of which is never followed by indigestion, or any of those physical discomforts attendant upon the partaking of improperly prepared food. In rendering possible the production of a baking powder possessed of these qualifications, the improved method of refining cream of tartar becomes at once a matter of material importance to the culinary world.

The December Magazines.

The December Atlantic is as attractive as ever in its plain, yet handsome typographical dress, in which it has appeared for more than a quarter of a century. The openins sereal, "In War Time," grows in interest; this is followed by an instructive article "Over the Andes." Edward Stanwood contributes an interesting paper on Canada and gives reasons why she should declare for herself. This article will be read with special interest by New York State readers who have long believed this was the proper thing for this province to do. The Atlantic for January will begin several serial stories by popular authors. Oliver Wendell Homes is again announced as a special contributor under the title "The New Portfolio." This sterling magazine will retain its old corps of writers with such new talent as the times may create during the coming year.

THE CENTURY.

The December Century closes the year with a rich and varied table of contents. Its illustrated articles are exceedingly interesting. A fine portrait of Gen. U. S. Grant graces the frontispiece, and the reader is referred to the second of the series of war articles. "The Capture of Fort Donelson" by Gen. Lew Wallace, in which appears the famous unconditional surrender order of Gen. Grant. The fiction consists of sprightly articles by Mark Twain and Grace Litchfield, the latter a novelette in three parts. Mr. Howells continues his charming story commenced last month. The Century for 1885 will cover a rich field of thought and fully sustain its reputation as a leading magazine.

The New York public was surprised a few years ago at the action of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, of little Corrinne, the child actress. The little girl, less than eight years old, was taken from her parents and kept in confinement until released by order of the Court and Mayor of the city. Mrs. Jennie Kimball, the mother of Corinne, who had been known to the public for many years as vocalist and comedienne, has devoted the greatest care to the training and education of Corinne, and the result is a development of natural faculties really phenomenal.

"When did you discover Corrinne's remarkable talent?" was asked of Mrs. Kimball.

"I can hardly remember the time when her eyes would not sparkle at the sound of music; she began to sing before she could talk. Before she was four years old she created a sensation and received a prize of a gold chain and locket studded with diamonds, at the National baby show in Boston. Next she sang in a concert given by Brown's Brigade Band, and in 1870 made her debut as Little Buttercup in the Juvenile Pinafore Company. Since then she has sung in opera and played various roles nearly everywhere."

Mrs. Kimball is a lady of fine presence, and when playing at the Boston Museum was herself known as "Little Jennie Kimball."

"What has become of the little lady?" asked the reporter.

"She has given place to the person you see before you. Like so many others I have grown somewhat fleshy. Indeed I assumed such proportions that I began to fear for my health. Why, at times I would have the most suffocating sensation in my heart; then again my head would be attacked and I have frequently fallen to the floor in a dead fainting fit. I consulted several eminent physicians and they told me I must abandon the stage, if I expected or hoped to live. This seemed terrible, for I am devoted to my profession and also to the development of Corinne."

"And yet you appear perfectly strong?"

"And so I am. Why, I have reduced my weight over twenty pounds within three months and I never felt better in my life. If any who are troubled as I was questions this, let them try Warner's safe cure, the remedy I used, and they will, I am sure, be speedily convinced of its truth. I believe it is the finest medicine in the world, and any number of my friends to whom I have recommended it have found it as beneficial as it has been to me."

"Is Corrinne's health good?"

"Perfect. The child has so much life and vivacity she is overflowing with it, on and off the stage."

The only previous instance of such remarkable prococity which history chronicles is that of the famous Peg Woffington, who first appeared in "The Beggar's opera," when but a little older than Corinne.

CHEESE MARKETS.

The Utica Markets.

UTICA, Nov. 24, 1884

Notwithstanding the lateness of the season and of the cheese offered for sale, we have had quite a brisk market to-day, with very satisfactory prices. The only regrets heard were those of a few salesmen who were sorry that they did not close out their Octobers last week. At a meeting of the board it was determined to have two more sales-days, and several salesmen of the large factories stated that they would be obliged to keep on making for a month to come. Two-day's sales will very nearly clean up the October make, and most of the every day cheese. The highest prices to-day were paid for the home trade; indeed, the bulk of the stock seemed to be taken for that trade.

One of our buyers purchased 900 boxes at Canton last week, September and early October stock, at 12., and 500 at 11⅞. Another is understood to have bought to-day 6,000 bexes of the East Otto and Lime Brook combinations in Cattaraugus county at 12½c.

The highest sale on our board to-day was one cheese weighing 60 lbs. at 25 cts. per lb. Ira L. Snell of the Bullock factory, sold it to Robert McAdam. It should be explained that the sale was the result of an election wager, Mr. Mc Adam agreeing to take a September cheese at double price if Cleveland were elected, and Mr. Snell agreeing to give him the cheese if Blaine were elected. There was some smiling over the transaction to-day.

Sales were as follows: Fifty boxes at 11c.; 30 at 11¼c.; 30 lots, 2,036 boxes, at 11⅛c.; one lot, 900 boxes at 11⅜c.; 5 lots, 595 boxes, at 11½c.; 2 lots, 340 boxes, at 11⅝c.; 6 lots. 566 boxes, at 11¾c.; 2 lots, 147 boxes, 11⅞c.; and 94 boxes at 12c. Sales 4,698 boxes; commissions, 320 boxes; total, 5,018 boxes. Ruling price 11¼c. Transactions of one year ago 3,340 boxes; ruling 11¼c.; of two years ago, 2,239; ruling 11⅝c.; of three years ago, 2,967; ruling, 11¼c.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

CHEESE.—The general features of the market are the same as last week, and prices are unchanged. Factories are fast closing out their stocks and only an occasional one is still manufacturing. Quite a number sold their entire lines, altho' some of it is not yet sufficiently cured to send forward. Finest cheese is wanted, but not much of this sort is offered now; such brings 11¾a12c. Late every day stock sells at 11¼a11½c., while every other day cheese, the bulk of it, finds a market at 11c., some at 11¼c. The transactions of the day are:

Lots	Boxes	Price
33	2,081	11
4	228	11¼
10	658	11½
3	218	11¾
3	549	12
9	440	com.
62	4,209
Farm Dairy	708
Total	4,917

FARM DAIRIES.—Sales of farm cheese were 708 boxes. Prices ranged at 10½a12c, most selling at 11¼c.

BUTTER.—There were 65 packages of farm dairy butter sold at 25a28c, nearly all at the latter price. No creamery sold.

Captain Hank Rice Throws His Cook Overboard. Makes His Escape.

A dispatch from Amsterdam, N. Y. of the 23d inst. says: It is believed the body of a woman found in the wheel of the canal propeller Myres, on November 9, was that of the cook of the canal boat Juno and Drury, and that she was thrown overboard by Captain Hank Rice. On September 23d a young man named George Lane, giving Buffalo as his residence, called at the office of Justice Strong at Port Jackson and asked a warrant for Rice on charge of assault. Rice knocked the cook into the canal. The justice issued a warrant for the arrest of Rice and the officers overtook the boat near Phillips lock and ordered him to come ashore. Instead of coming to the towpath Rice drew his boat to the heelpath, jumped off and ran over the hills. Nothing has been heard form him since.

President Gilbert, of Little Falls, has since received an anonymous postal card informing him that a boatman named Hank Rice had thrown a woman overboard, and that the steersman knew all about the crime and could tell a horrible tale. The card was handed to the police for inspection.

The affair causes much excitment in the village."

It is supposed here that the perpetrators of this crime is none other than Capt. Hank Rice of this village, who is known to be a desperate man when his temper gets the best of him. The affair has caused considerable talk on the streets the past two days.

Baptist Reception.

On Friday evening last the parlors of the Baptist church were filled to overflowing with people of that and other churches, gathered to welcome the newly elected pastor, Rev. J. C. Breaker. All seemed to be in good spirits. Rev. Mr. Olmstead of Oswego Falls, on behalf of the congregation present made the welcoming speech in appropriate style and was responded to by Rev. Mr. Breaker in an able manner. During his speech Mr. Breaker gave the people to understand that he was ready and willing to assist in promoting the temperance cause. Mr. Breaker then proceeded to make himself acquainted with the many who were waiting to shake his hand. There was an abunant supply of refreshments on the tastefully spread tables in the basement parlors which were freely partaken of by each and all. At a late hour the gathering left for their different homes well pleased with their new pastor and the enjoyments of evening. It was one of the pleasantest events of the kind held in our village for some time.

Coming.

The Venetian Troubadours from Venice. They are now making a tour of this country. Their route took in Oswego and Syracuse and in arranging dates left them with two open ones. I induced them to fill them in at Baldwinsville and Fulton. While something after the style of the famous Spanish Students they are finer musicians and give more of a variety of entertainment. Their date for Tuesday, Dec. 2d is close to the Philharmonics but was the only date I could have them this season.

Yours &c,

H. HOWARD,
Manager of Stephens Opera House.

Narrow Escape.

Andrew Jones of this village narrowly escaped death last Saturday. He was at work in the pit at the Falls stone mill, in blasting the rock and supposing from a sound he heard that the blast had gone off—he went to examine. When near it the blast went off and hurled him up against the building. He fell in the water senseless and would have drowned had not assistance been near. He received some severe cuts on the head but is getting better rapidly. It was a miss that makes one shudder to think of.

The five mile race for the championship of county between Clark of Fulton and Fayette of Oswego took place at Fulton last evening. Clark took the lead by a quarter of a lap and held it through the first two miles. He then lessened his speed and permitted Fayette to pass him, following close on to the next mile when he spurted by Fayette, but the Oswego contestant hastened his speed and again shot by Clark, holding the lead to the end. The judges however declared the race a tie.

The New Bulkhead at Fulton.

The Fulton correspondent of the Syracuse Standard says: Canal Superintendent Richardson has just completed a new bulkhead at the west end of the state dam at an outlay of $2,500. It was no easy task in the deep wrter, at the bottom of which was a perfect forest of old logs and treees, drawn there by the action of the water, to build a water-tight coffer dam. This part of the work was successfully performed by Charles Easton, who has had a wide experience in state work. The timbering is of white oak and must last a full score of year. The same general features are observed in the construction as at first laid down by the late William Schenck and the engineer then in charge. The water power at this point at present owned by Schuyler C Schenck, now of Toledo, is very valuable, with but a small portion of it in use. John Boardman, the capable foreman of the State shop, had charge of the bulkhead work and has caused a first class job to be executed. New flumes are being constructed and much needed work done.

Silver Wedding.

The home of Dr. L. H. Lake on Oneida street was aglow with happy faces on Monday evening last, the occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Dr. Jennie E. and Dr. L. H. Lake. About forty of the Drs's most intimate friends were present to add their congratulations to the happy union. Many rare and costly gifts were bestowed, and their twenty-fifth milestone of married life was made memorable by the gathering of friends, where the guarded formalities of life were cast aside and the evening given to truly social intercourse. Various dainty refreshments were served. The TIMES hopes that in years to come it may have the pleasure of announcing their golden wedding.

Be at the grand opening of the amusement season Monday evening next at Stephens Opera House. The Philharmonics with seventy people. Admission, 35 cents, reserve seats 50 cents

Complaints have been made of late by the lady students of No. 2 school to the effect that articles of apparel belonging to them were taken from the halls during school hours. A person who will commit a petty crime of this sort deserves severe punishment.

The Syracuse Sunday Times says: The Philharmonics will open the Stephens Opera House at Fulton with the "Chimes," on the first of next month. There is no doubt but that it will be a very successful inaugural of the new management of Mr. H. Howard, of Baldwinsville.

"Johnny, why didn't you pile up that load of kingling nicely against the cellar wall?" You seem to neglect your duties more and more every day. "Well, no wonder. Why, don't you know this is Presidential year? There hain't no business carried on right now."

A certain Granbyite supposed he had secured the prize and had gone to some expense in making preliminary preparations for the wedding, but Neddy stole a march on him at the eleventh hour and Patsy is disconsolate in consequence. A wedding reception was held at the residence of Mrs. Henry Martin, a sister of the happy bridegroom. An elegant repast was served and with music and dancing a happy time was enjoyed until the small hours of the morning."

As it is, I have been delayed a month in making up this season's entertainments, but you have gained by the delay, for by rare luck I have been able to book for your town a finer class of entertainments than was ever given in Fulton. Thanksgiving night they are at Oswego in the same opera. Their orchestra consists of 30 pieces and have a caste of 40 persons. I purpose making the lecture course the best ever presented to you with the following talent. The brilliant lecturer Robert Collyer. The popular Redpath concert company. The amusing and interesting Saueh Breh in his Oriental entertainment, and that author who is known at nearly every fireside. E. P. Roe, making four entertainments that can not help to please and instruct. Reserved seats. Season tickets will be put at the remarkably low figure—only $1.35. On sale Dec. 1st at Watson's drug store. Corn Fodder [illegible]

My experience in [illegible] corn fodder is that, when proper attention is given to the curing, it is a [illegible], but the proportion of it wasted is [illegible] fearful. The blades and tenderer portions are eaten with relish, but the coarsest portion, which are full of saccharine-matter, as any one may satisfy himself by cutting off a portion and chewing it, is generally rejected because animals cannot eat it, no matter how hungry or how willing they may be. Any one who has seen a cow or steer with the end of a corn stalk in its mouth, switching the head from side to side in the vain endeavor to break off a piece of such dimensions as could masticate, will readily understand why such a large proportion of the corn fodder is not eaten. I think the proportion is much greater than is generally supposed, for the blades and lighter portions are very light for their bulk, and the coarse stalks very heavy. I have made no effort to arrive at the weights in either case, but every farmer knows the stalks constitute a good share of the whole. This fall I have been using a cutting machine, and find that practically everything is eaten, and little of value wasted. And I have about come to the conclusion that if it will pay to save and cure corn fodder at all, it will pay to cut it. I am now speaking of farms where everything is kept up close and snug, an effort made to maintain as much live stock as can be safely carried, and to utilize everything in the way of stock feed. On farms where hundreds of acres of corn are raised for the sake of having the grain to sell, and where there is necessarily a surplus of grain fodder if the effort is made to save it, and an impossibility of maintaining through the whole season a sufficient number of animals to consume to advantage all this rough forage—on such farms, perhaps, a different method may be preferable. But I have my doubts about this being the best way to manage the farm. It would be better to put down more in grass, and equalize to a greater extent the capacities of the farm in different parts of the season for carrying live stock, so that about so many head could be carried the whole year through.

But cutting fodder involves a certain amount of labor. And if I make up my mind to submit to this expense for the reasons already entailed, it seems to me quite obvious that there are very material advantages in cutting and feeding it as fodder. I have no experience with ensilage, but I am about prepared to try a silo another season. If the corn is to be cut at all, it had better be cut all at once, when all hands can make a regular business of it, and get it out of the way, than to be cut by piecemeal, a little at a time when wanted. It has to be brought in from the field at some time, so that matter and the cutting for ensilage may be considered as no extra expense. Then the matter of curing the fodder, which is in some seasons not an easy operation, will be got entirely rid of the silo will take care of it in good shape. Then with the best of curing there are more or less dried stalks which the cattle do not eat, and there is considerable less of blades in handling when the fodder is dry, which is avoided where the fodder is preserved green in a silo. It seems to me the cutting of the fodder at any time for the feeding carries with it the adoption of the ensilage system.—[Correspondence Breeder's Gazette.

Lesson from Two Contrasted Fields

We recently crossed two fields, separated by a line fence only. They are on a gentle slope at the base of a hill, and both alike in level or inclination, in composition, in receiving the wash from the higher land, and in the water in the dark, springy subsoil. A purchaser standing at a distance would let the flip of a copper decide the choice between the two fields, acre for acre. Going on them revealed a very great difference in the present value of these two fields, which we will call A and B.

On field A the herbage is mainly a coarse, weiry grass, often in tunicks with small barren spaces between. In spots the ground is spongy and miry, except after a severe drought. When mown it yields a ton or so of poor hay, worth for feeding hardly half as much as the same weight of timothy. When pastured, the cattle nibble merely the ends of the best portions of the field.

In field B we found a smooth surface, a compact, firm soil, and a luxuriant growth of the best grass, mainly timothy. It averages fully two tons per acre of first quality hay, and abundant, excellent autumn pasturage. Hay here averages about $12 a ton, and the pasturage is worth at least one-third as much as the hay cut. At these rates the hay and pasturage from field A is worth $8 an acre, less $3 per ton for cutting and handling the hay, or net $5 per acre. [illegible] hay and pasturage $32, less [illegible], or net, $36 per acre. [illegible] is a rich soil, [illegible]. Whence this difference of $31 per acre, equal to 6 per cent. on $510 per acre? The result of careful inquiry turned out as we expected. About twenty-two years ago the owner of field B, now deceased, though having limited means, bought some [illegible], hauling them twenty miles in winter. With these, and in part with [illegible]

Swine Fever.

T. W. O., Corn, Pa.—The skins of some of my hogs are tender and dark-red in patches, with eruptions here and there. The animals sometimes shiver, are very dull and desire to hide under the litter. No appetite, but a good deal of thirst in severe cases; gait unsteady; hind limbs weak; belly tender; eyes sore in most cases; sight apparently lost in some; the neck and throat swell so as to impede breathing. A few cases linger from three weeks to a month, but most are fatal in a week; about half the animals attacked die. What is the ailment and how should it be treated?

ANSWERED BY PROF. F. L. KILBOURNE.

The disease is swine fever or intestinal fever in swine, commonly known as "hog cholera;" a specific contagious fever of swine, due to the introduction and development of bacteria (Baccilli suis) within the system. It is propagated mainly, if not entirely, by contagion; the virus or poison may be carried half a mile or more on the wind, or to any distance by materials, animals and persons that have come in contact with the contagion; also for considerable distances by the currents of running streams. The poison is not destroyed by freezing, and may be preserved for at least one or two month if kept dry and excluded from free excess of air. No specific remedy for the disease is known. Treatment ought not to be attempted except in isolated localities, with the constant use of disinfectants. Even then the cost of treatment and care through a long, tedious recovery, is much greater than the value of the animals, except in case of valuable breeding stock. At the onset, if there is constipation, give a mild laxative (castor oil 3 ozs., rhubarb 1 dr.) with injections of warm water. If fever runs high, give 20 grains each of nitrate of potash and bisulphite of soda every three or four hours, until the fever subsides. Such antiseptic agents as carbolic acid, 10 drops; or iodine, 5 grains, twice daily, are often beneficial. Give special attention to the diet and care of the animals. This is of as much importance as the medicine, if not more. Feed on soft, nourishing food, like boiled ofgruel barley, oats or rye, with slops, milk and vegetables. Give little or no corn. Give to drink plenty of fresh, cool water, slightly acidulated with sulphuric acid. The pens should be kept dry, and be cleaned daily. Thoroughly disinfect the pens daily with a weak solution of carbolic acid (crude carbolic acid two ounces, water one gallon) by sprinkling the walls and floor. All refuse from the pen should be mixed with the carbolic solution. If the patient survives the first week, he is in a fair way to a slow recovery. Should there now be signs of ulceration of the bowels, indicated by bloody dung or tender belly, give oil of turpentine, 15 to 20 drops twice, daily. Finally, when the animal is convalescent, give, as a tonic, sulphate of iron 15 grains; powdered gentian, 25 grains; and nitrate of potash, 25 grains; to be given night and morning. After several days omit the iron for two or three days. The best method is to attend to the undiseased, and not attempt the cure of diseased animals. More stock will be saved in the end, and in very much better condition. Kill and bury all diseased animals, and thoroughly disinfect, with the carbolic solution, everything with which they come in contact. Keep a close watch on the survivors, and remove all that show the first signs of illness, and destroy and disinfect as soon as they show symptoms of the disease. As a preventive, give to each animal one dram of charcoal and about 10 drops of carbolic acid twice or thrice daily in their drinking water, which should preferably be from a well; wash all sores with dilute carbolic acid. Avoid water which has run near a diseased heard; also all fowls, articles, animals, or persons that have been near the disease and have not been disinfected. Keep the pens and yards clean and free from decomposing organic matter, and sprinkle daily with the carbolic solution when the disease is prevalent in the vicinity.—[R. N. Y.

Sunlight in Stables.

We tried an experiment some years since to test the effect of absence of light on a calf. We had two deep red calves the same age (six days) one weighing 180 pounds and the other 182 pounds. The latter we placed in a dark room, with a trough that could be filled by a spout through a partition. The other was confined in the same amount of space, but in full light, and both were fed the same amount of food for the next three months. The object was to test the effect of light upon such a growing animal.

At the end of the time the one in the light weighed 460 pounds, and the one in the dark weighed 366 pounds, and its color had faded to a very pale dirty red. Its eyes were so much affected when admitted to the light that it kept them closed most of the time for the first week or two. [illegible]

[illegible]

Call her false or call me free—
 Yea, whatever light may shine,
No man on your face shall see
 Any grief for change on mine.

Yet the sin is on us both—
 Time to dance is not to woo;
Wooing light makes fickle troth—
 Scorn of me recoils on you.

Learn to win a lady's faith
 Nobly, as the thing is high;
Bravely, as for life and death—
 With loyal gravity.

Lead her from the festive boards,
 Point her to the starry skies;
Guard her by your truthful words
 Pure from courtship flatteries.

By your truth, she shall be true—
 Even true as wives of yore—
And her yes, once said to you,
 Shall be yes forevermore.

Keep It Back.

Husbands and wives do not know till they learn by experience (which some never do) how much can be added to the sum of their happiness by thinking twice, and indefinitely postponing when either is tempted to say a cutting thing to the other. It does not take a great while for a young couple to win the confidence each of the other, that nothing designed to wound will be said. When this confidence is established, words which otherwise would inflict pain become harmless. In a family where this confidence is secured by uniform respect for the feelings of each other, there is a degree of freedom from restraint, and of general happiness, which is impossible where it is not. Every good family is a training school in which the husband and wife, from the nuptial day, are pupils.

He is an exceptional and rarely fortunate young man who has not some habits of deportment which mar his character and influence. It is expected of the wife that she will correct and eradicate these. Unless the husband have an incurable, coarse nature, she is justly held responsible for the polish and neatness of his manners, as much as for the purity of his linen, when he appears in church or society. And if the wife have unpleasant imperfections of manner or conduct, it always reflects upon the husband. This shows that by common consent the family is regarded as a training school in which the husband and wife, as well as the children, are learners. Such being the case, each would submit to the necessary discipline with pleasure.

But if the habit of cutting and sarcastic words prevail, it will break up that school, and neither can be of any benefit to the other. There is injury as well as unhappiness of very serious character resulting from a sharp tongue in the family. And the sharp tongue may not—usually at first does not—represent the real sentiment of the heart, but the bitterness is not long in finding its way to the heart, and there it is liable to remain—not always active, but always ready and always suspected.

Before you say a cutting word to husband, wife or child, think it over deliberately.

COMMON SENSE TALK TO BILIOUS PEOPLE.
CLEAR TESTIMONY OF A WITNESS.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—About eight years ago I began to suffer from a Liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than calling it a "drawing in" sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to any business. This covered a period of a year.

Finally Mr Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your FAVORITE REMEDY as an excellent thing for the liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found most decided relief: the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without my former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I cannot better express my approbation of Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to many of my friends and acquaintances. Yours Truly, S. PEPSON.

How Watch Cases are Made.

Most persons have an ambition to carry a gold watch case, and yet few people know how a watch case is made, or the vast difference in the quality of them. In a SOLID GOLD WATCH CASE, aside from the necessary thickness for engraving and polishing, a large proportion of the metal is needed only to stiffen and hold the engraved portions in place, and supply strength. The surplus is not only needless, but undesirable, because gold is a soft metal and cannot furnish the stiffness, strength and elasticity necessary to make the case permanently strong and close-fitting. The perfect watch case must combine gold with some metal that will supply that in which the gold is deficient. This has been accomplished by the James Boss' Gold Watch Case TRADE MARK which saves the WASTE of needless gold, and INCREASES the SOLIDITY and STRENGTH of the case, and at the same time reduces the cost ONE HALF.

The Best Estate.

BY F. E. WEATHERLY.

Art thou thine own heart's conqueror?
  Strive ever then to be;
That is the fight that is most sore,
  The noblest victory.

Art thou beloved by one true heart?
  O prize it! it is rare;
There are so many in the mart,
  So many false and fair.

Art thou alone? O say not so!
  The world is full, be sure;
There is so much of want and woe,
  So much that thou canst cure.

Art thou in poverty thyself?
  Thou still canst help a friend;
Kind words are more than any pelf,
  Good words need never end.

Art thou content in youth or age?
  Then let who will be great;
Thou hast the noblest heritage,
  Thou hast the best estate!

FLORENCE'S LOVER.

"I am so sorry—and Mr. Le Grande coming too! I do wish Metta was not away, but she will be at home for dinner, and he will want to rest. You will see that he is shown instantly to his rooms, Florence," with a frowning glance at the pretty penniless niece, which had been so ungraciously received into the family by herself and daughter, and whom they made so useful.

"Yes, aunt" the girl answered pleasantly, lifting her bright face for a moment from the lace which she was beading for Metta's pale-blue dress.

Mrs. Andrews frowned. "You will not call me 'aunt' before Mr. Le Grande," she said frostily; it will be as well for him not to know that we have any poor relatives; only call me so when we are all alone; I would rather he did not know that you and dear Metta were related."

"Aunt!" the girl's voice was pained and low, but Mrs. Andrews did not heed it.

"The new curate may call to-day, and you may explain that matter to him. I mean about those new schools; and now I must go. You quite understand that you are not to hold any conversation with Mr. Le Grande?"

"I quite understand," Florence Desmond said slowly; but, about my not calling you aunt. Are—are you ashamed to own me? Is it so great a crime to be poor and friendless? I have done nothing for which you might forbid me to claim relationship to you and Metta."

"You do not seem to understand that you are a—sort of servant here, Florence;—and—

She was silenced by the sudden flash in the eyes lifted to hers, the sudden pallor on the beautiful girlish face.

"A sort of servant she said slowly; "yet my dead mother was your only sister, Mrs. Andrews."

"Yes, yes, of course," the lady said in some embarrassment; "but we won't talk of that now; the carriage is waiting and I must hurry. You will not forget."

"I will not forget. I am not to hold any conversation with Mr. Le Grande, and I am to explain about the schools to the new curate."

Then the elder lady buttoned the last button of her long gloves, and, feeling rather uncomfortable, sailed from the room; and presently her niece heard the roll of wheels and the drive and knew that Mrs. Andrews had gone most unwillingly to keep an engagement which had been made a week before the telegram had come announcing the projected visit of the young millionaire, who had been so very friendly with the Andrews at the seaside in August, and had seemed so devoted to the flaxened haired Metta as to raise high hopes in the bosoms of herself and her ambitious mother.

But Florence was not thinking of the millionaire, as she flung aside the strip of lace, and went to the window; she was thinking bitterly of the hopes she had cherished of a home and kindness, when, six montes before she had turned from her mother's grave, and accepted so gratefully the home given her by her mother's sister. Had it been a home? She had labored long and unweariedly every day since she had entered it; she had been set aside, and slighted and wounded hourly by the haughty woman and her frivolous daughter; she had, indeed, been a sort of servant, but without the servant's pay.

A sob choked her, and she found that tears were running down her cheeks.

"I am so utterly alone in the world, so sick at heart, and lonely," she murmured; "and yet I am so young, I can do better with my life than give it to them and let them crush it. I will speak to the curate. Perhaps—perhaps he will want a teacher for this school; and I am capable of that. I could surely teach little children."

She dried her tears and folded up her work. Then taking up her hat, carried it in her hand and went out to the crisp October air. Half an hour later she stood at the great entrance-gate watching the approach of a stranger along the highway.

She was very pretty as she stood there, a few scarlet leaves in her bosom, her brown hair tossed roughly by the breeze, a faint color in her cheeks, a look of girlish interest in her eyes; and the young man, who hastened his approach at the sight of her, thought she made an almost perfect picture there, under the crimson and gold of the drooping branches. Pausing, he lifted his hat respectfully.

"You are Mr. Lane," she said smiling [illegible]. "My—Mrs. Andrews expected you to-day, but she could not [illegible] everything to [illegible]

"Yes?" The gentleman smiled at her confusion, and she thought immediately that he had the frankest and most encourageing smile she had ever seen; just the face for a clergyman, she told herself, so kindly and so gentle.

"I thought perhaps you had not engaged the teachers," she said, confusedly, "and—I think I could teach if Mr. Ellis would give me; do you think he would?"

She was very much in earnest, as the young man saw. He smiled reassuringly.

"May I ask your name?" he questioned gently; "I have no doubt of your qualifications."

"My name is Florence Desmond," she answered hurriedly, and will you say to Mr. Ellis that I will try to please him? I will do my very best, if he will but employ me."

"You are so young," the gentleman said, tracing he face with interest, his eyes softening as he went over the girlish figure in its mourning garb.

"I am nearly 18, and—and—" her voice broke, as her eyes followed his to the straight folds of her black dress. "It is necessary," she said softly; "I am all alone now."

"I understand my poor child." He held his hand, in which the girl put her own frankly. "I quite understand, and I will help you."

"You are so kind," Florence murmured gratefully. And then she drew her hand from his, for there was a sound of wheels on the roadway and the carriage containing Mrs. Andrews and her daughter whirled in at the gate. In another moment it had drawn up and the lady was leaning forward, holding out a white hand to the stranger, while Metta's face was wreathed in smiles.

"How civil you are to the new curate!" Florence thought; but a moment later she had turned red as a peony and was darting off among the trees, for she had caught her aunt's words.

"It was so kind of you to come to our dull place, Mr. Le Grande!"

For nearly a week after Florence saw nothing of the guest, save from a distance, and then one morning, greatly to her surprise, she was summoned to the drawing-room; her aunt was there, and pretty, petted Metta, and the gentleman whom she had mistaken for the curate; her heart was beating terribly fast as she entered, and did not cease when Mr. Le Grande left his chair and approached her, holding an open sheet in his hand and smiling.

"I have something for you Miss Desmond," he said pleasantly; "a letter from my sister, which she enclosed in one to me. I did not forget my promise to you, and I think this will be more agreeable than the school."

Florence could not say a word; she saw the frown on her aunt's brow and the supercilious questioning in her cousin's eyes; but she took the letter held out to her and opened it tremblingly.

"Oh, how kind you are to me!" burst from her involuntarily when she read, for she found herself offered the position of governess by Mrs. Allison, Mr. LeGrande's sister.

"Then you accept the offer?" Clarke Le Grande asked, pleasantly "I think my sister should thank me, not you, Miss Desmond. You see she desires you to commence your duties at once. I will be returning to B—— in just four days from this; it would be a great pleasure for me to be you escort."

So it was settled, and Mrs. Andrews must needs gnash her teeth in secret.

"There is no hope for me now, mamma," Metta said that night, shaking her flaxen head decidedly; "one cannot help seeing that he is in love with Florence. I must look up a new admirer, and now I am rather sorry we weren't more civil to Florry. Take my word for it, she will be Mrs Clarke Le Grande within a year."

And Metta was right, for when Florence laid aside her mourning it was to don white satin and orange blossoms in the fair days of spring.

"It was just her luck," sighed Mrs. Andrews, "and Metta hasn't even an eligible admirer.

The Dentists Treat.

"I tell yer, pard, it's tough goin' 'thout a drink fer two hull days. Say, you wait fer me b'hind them freight cars while I go'n raise somethin' damp." (Rushes into a well-filled dentist's lair.)

"Ow-o-o-oh ouch. Oh! oo!"

"Toothache!"

"Toothache! Great Cæsar! should remark. Ouch! O-w-oh-ouch! Git out yer insterments quick! Hold on! Gimme a big drink o' liquor. It's a back molar'n. It must have suthin' bracin'. Ouch!" and he fairly danced with grief.

Dentist rushes down stairs and returns with a pint of whisky.

"Take a big swallow and get into the chair."

Sufferer tastes it. "Great Scott! This is whisky. I must have brandy—strong brandy; whar'd you git it? I'll change it."

Washington Letter.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29, 1884.—The two coming events that are most talked of in Washington now are the inauguration, and the monument dedication. Imposing as were the inagural ceremonies of President Garfield, they will doubtless be excelled by the celebration of the advent to power of the only democratic president that this generation has seen. Young democracy and old democracy will both be here to witness the pageant.

Preceeding that celebration by less than a fortnight, will be the ceremonies to be observed in honor of the completion of the Washington monument. This will add greatly to the concourse of the nation's territory, who will seek to participate in or witness two such memorable ceremonies.

Congress has confided the exercises relating to the inauguration of the monument to a committee of Senators and Representatives, and the installation ceremonies of President-elect Cleveland will be in the hands of the citizens of the District of Columbia. Arrangements are already under way providing accommodations and places of sojourn for the large numbers of people who will be here. Governor Cleveland, Attorney General O'Brien, Controller Chapin, and other state officers at Albany have secured rooms at Willard's hotel for the inauguration, as have also the Cleveland Body Guard, and the Cleveland Buffalo club.

More than two weeks ago, the Washington monument reached a point higher than that of any artificial structure in the world. It is getting pretty cold for the workmen now, up there among the clouds. Their dinners and lunches are served to them hot on the summit, and whenever a man feels cold, he can always have a cup of hot coffee. On a foggy morning, while the top of the monument is bathed in the sun's rays, looking down, nothing can be seen of the ground beneath, which is hidden by the masses of rolling clouds. It is thought the final touches could be made in fifteen days of fine weather, but on really cold days work cannot proceed.

Since the republican headquarters here were closed, the building has been rented by the proprietor of the Arlington hotel, to accommodate guests who will come to the inauguration.

President Arthur leads a very quiet life now, spending the business part of the day at the White House, and going out to Soldiers Home in the afternoon. He will be busy for another week yet on his message to Congress, and it may be the last that a republican president will send to a Congress of the United States for many years. It is said he will set forth the principles and policies which he thinks should control the party, and make such recommendations on the subject of the collection of the revenues, the management of the government business generally, and the foreign relations of the United States, as shall afford a practicable basis for future party action.

The general opinion of Members of Congress who have arrived in Washington is that very little will be done at the coming session beyond the passage of appropriation bills. It is not improbable that something may be done with the pending land grant forfeiture bills, the bill to prohibit the importation of foreign labor, and the Educational bill, but it is likely that appropriation and pension bills will consume most of the session.

Although Governor Cleveland has remarked that he supposed his friends would have consulted him before deciding the matter of his Cabinet, his party friends in Washington are trying as industriously as ever to save him all trouble in that direction. Mr. Randall's position continues to be a topic of discussion among the politicians. The Interior department is the last place selected for him, upon the ground that it is now the most important department of the Government, and would open a field to Mr. Randall's aggressiveness that would bring credit to himself and party.

They say when the Tariff question is taken up by the next Congress, it will be desirable to have the sturdy protectionist in a place where his views can do no harm.

FASHION NOTES.

The polonaise is gaining in favor for street wear.

Tam O'Shanter hats are worn for riding and walking.

Lilies of the valley are to be used to fasten bridal veils.

The favorite brown for trimming is the natural beaver.

Cuffs are now considered indispensable to a walking costume.

Flat muffs curved to hold the hands nicely are very popular.

Short mantles of sealskin are among the new garments this winter.

Some of the newest brocades are of cream satin covered with shaded velvet roses.

Long seal skin cloaks, fitted to the figure, will be the most stylish of dressy wraps this winter.

New seal turbans have very close brims, with high crowns that taper or that are slightly indented.

The fur lined circular remains in favor as a useful wrap, but is not chosen for a garment for stylish wear.

The most comfortable of the new dancing slippers are those made of black satin that lace up the front.

All the imported dresses are made with only medium close fitting sleeves, and many of them flow at the wrist.

Seal skin jackets which fit smoothly and are known as Jersey jackets, will be much worn the coming season.

A wintry polk bonnet for a young face is made in the fish-wife shape, pointed in front, and faced with mink.

Plush wraps are worn by young ladies. They are generally of crimson or dark blue, and are lined with bright satin.

Brown furs are again in favor and those who have taken care of their royal sables and useful mink now find their reward.

Fur top boots are to be worn this winter. They reach half way to the knee, and are of fine thick black cloth, with patent leather trimming.

A novelty in small seal capes is called a fichu, and consists of a scarf mantle that reaches the waist line behind and has half-long pointed fronts.

The latest fancy is to carry the opera glass, handkerchief and scent bottle in a little velvet or plush bag, suspended from the arm by a ribbon, run about the top hem.

Seal hats have brims that recede until they become very narrow behind, and there are also English walking hats of this fur. Birds in clusters, or else breasts mounted in long shapes, are the trimmings.

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock, Pa., was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give no relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October she procured a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 50 lbs. in a few months. He was Prepared to Go.

"Young man, are you prepared to go?" asked the revivalist of a young man in the back row, after the meeting was over.

"Yes, sir, perfectly."

"Do you think, every night as you go to bed, that you may be called before morning?"

"It's always on my mind, sir."

"That's right. And you are always ready to go whenever the angel comes, without warning and unannounced?"

"Yes, sir, I always sleep with my clothes all on and my overcoat, and an extra paper collar on the chair at the side of my bed. I'm always ready."

"But, my dear young man, you must mistake me."

"Not at all, sir. I'm a handsome coachman, and I know my business. Whenever the angel of the household calls, I'm ready to take the first train." —[Boston Times.

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits. 27t4

RINGLAND HOUSE!

[illegible] Men Who are Wanted.

The great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from centre to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or foe, in themselves as well as in others. Men whose consciences are as steady as the needle to the pole. Men who will stand to the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth and look the world and the devil right in the eye. Men who neither brag nor run. Men who neither flag nor flinch. Men who can have courage without whistling for it. Men in whom the current of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong, for secterian limits, and too strong for secterian. Men who do not strive, nor cry, nor cause their voices to be heard in the street, but who will not fail or be discouraged till judgement be set on the earth. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their duty and do it. Men who know their place and fill it. Men who mind their own business. Men who are not to lazy to work nor too proud to be poor. Men who are willing to eat what they earn, and wear what they have paid for.

Yes, young man these are the kind of men demanded by the present times. But where shall we look for them? Do our colleges send them forth? Are the professions filled with them? Do they guide the plow, push the plane or strike the anvil? The spirit of progress bids them to come forth and take their places in the front rank of reform and civilization.—[Troy Times.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE

FOR 1885.

A PAPER DEVOTED TO AMERICAN INTERESTS.

LARGEST REPUBLICAN CIRCULATION IN AMERICA.

The Tribune begins the new subscription year with prospects unparalelled in its history. Its circulation for the week ending Nov. 9, 1884, was as follows:

Monday, Nov. 3,	99,100
Tuesday, Nov. 4,	101,500
Wednesday, Nov. 5,	188,600
Thursday, Nov. 6,	167,100
Friday, Nov. 7,	160,600
Saturday, Nov. 8,	172,000
Sunday, Nov. 9,	129,000
Weekly, Nov. 5, exclusive of all short term campaign subscriptions,	145,910
Semi-Weekly	38,300

Total number of Tribunes printed and sold during week ending Nov. 9, exclusive of campaign subscriptions,	1,202,110

Ninety-four tons of paper were used in printing the week's issues. This was of course an election week "spurt," which "broke the record" in New York. Settling back into its "steady gait," The Tribune's record stood on the following week:

average daily circulation of the Daily Tribune, for week ending Nov. 15, 1884,	121,400
Weekly Tribune, Nov. 12, 1884	142,650

During 1885 The Tribune will strive more zealously and hopefully than ever for its political faith. The return to power of the party that brought on the rebellion must make the coming year one of the most interesting in our history. The more the people know of how democrats deal with their Government, the surer is republican success the next time; and The Tribune appeals to its friends to help spread such knowledge broadcast.

The Tribunee gives the news fully, fairly and early; it is a safe and attractive paper for the family circle; and is the persistent advocate of work for American workmen, a great, paying home market for American grain and meat, the extension of our foreign trade, and the general protection of American interests. It favors every practical effort to check intemperance, and is always on the side of morality, reform, and progress. Its Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions contain notably complete and valuable Agricultural, Household, Literary and Juvenile departments, with serial stories, abundant correspondence, interesting miscellany and some fun. Every member of the family, old or young, finds in it instruction and entertainment.

Every postmaster and club agent is invited to form yearly clubs at once for The Tribune. The following premiums are offered in combination with subscriptions:

Unabridged Dictionary, both Webster's and Worcester's.

Wood's Household Practice of Medicine, 2 vols., illustrated, 819 and 942 pages.

The Library of Useful Knowledge, 15 vols. nearly 900 pages each, embracing Chambers' Encyclopedia, complete, with American additions.

The Waterbury Watch, a popular and successful premium.

JOHN A. McKAY - - EDITOR

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The closing message of President Arthur is replete with statesmanlike advice, stated in plain common sense language; but it would seem a great statesman could have found in the occasion of his retirement from this high office, and the control of a great party, which had abolished slavery, put down the rebellion, and placed this republic in the front rank of nations, inspiration for words on the party which had contributed to this end. The opportunity was in itself an inspiration, but Mr. Arthur leaves the reader to draw his own conclusions. His advice to the American people is characteristically modest and graceful, and you increase the respect for him as a wise and careful executive.

A year or two since quite a number of our Fulton families did much of their shopping in Syracuse, Oswego and New York. Not so many do now, but still there are some. We want the priviledge of recording the fact that not one family or person trade away from home but rather that trade is drawn here. It is just to our merchants that it should be so, for while in many towns like Fulton trade has decreased and the merchants have slumbered. Here they have this season been even more energetic than usual. Have put in larger and finer stocks and made more improvements. Fulton is to-day stocked with a better line of merchandise than she ever was before. The goods are new and of better quality and more than this the prices are as low as they are in the city. People often try to imagine that they are getting better bargains in the city, but do not. Do you estimate the cost of your fare both ways, your dinner, the useless extra nick nacks bought because you are in the city, the fret of getting ready to go, the tiresome day of shopping, the day lost, &c. Look at the question fairly and you are the loser. Perhaps it may sometimes happen that you call for something at a store that they do not have—the same thing might happen in the city. Do not commence trading out of town on the plea that our stores do not keep anything that anybody wants. If they are out of or have not got what you want, let them order it for you. They will get their discount as merchants and can sell to you lower than you can buy the same elsewere and there is another reason. Perhaps you are a farmer's wife. Now our merchants do not like to buy produce of those who do not buy in Fulton. Suppose you are a grocer and you buy your wife's dry-goods in the city. Would it not be a matter of protection for the dry-goods merchants to refuse to buy your groceries? It is a poor policy to ignore home merchants. Nearly every one here has business relatives either direct or indirect, and as a natural consequence business will try to protect itself against trade leaving home. We trust that people will consider the matter in its true light and confine their trade to our own merchants.

It is a somewhat instrubtive comment upon English policy in Ireland, remarks the London Truth, that last years a force of nearly 25,000 officers and men was found necessary to garrison the country, while only 3,830 were stationed in Scotland. Unless, however, something is done to reform the Scotch land system, the Truth thinks, another Ireland will be upon English hands. Already the Skye crofters are in a state bordering on rebellion, while those of Tiree have passed a resolution to seize a tract of land by force if it is not given to them within a stated period. A force of police and soldiers has been sent to the island of Skye.

It is estimated the decrease of the public debt for will not be much over one million. This is due to the reduction of revenues for the month and because of the payment of over eight million on account of pensions.

Gen. Logan is reputed to be a poor man, having lost by bad investments, property he once owned, valued at about $150,000, and having nothing to depend on outside of his salary as United States Senator. He is a lawyer by profession, but has not practiced for many years.

A new commercial treaty between the United States and Spain in regard to Cuba and Port Rico has been concluded. The terms of the treaty are especially advantageous to the United States, embracing a free exchange of various products which have hitherto been under a heavy export duty, and conferring privileges on merchant's vessels plying between the two countries, abolishing all tonnage and consular fees, arranging increased facilities for commercial travellers, and for reforms in the Cuba costumes regulations. The benefits of the treaty are to be confined to the United States and Spain. It will go into operation as soon as ratified by congress. It is believed that it will greatly benefit American commercial interests with the West Indies.

Obituary.

Mrs. James H. Branch died at her residence on Cayuga street last Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. She had been an invalid for many years. Her husband died March 20th, 1881. They had been residents here for thirty-five years. Mrs. Branch was a most earnest and exemplary christian woman. She and her husband were among the early members of the M. E. church and Mr. Branch was a class leader for more than thirty years. Mrs. Branch was a woman who made the cause of temperance a part of her religious faith. She had a loving, tender sympathy for all. The morning which broke upon the seventy-second anniversary of her life, also ushered her freed spirit into that heavenly life which she by long years of consistent piety had become so well fitted to enter upon. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at her late residence, Rev. Mr. Markham officiating. The remains were interred at Mt. Adnah.

The Tribune "Breaks" The Record.

The prospectus of The Tribune in another column, will gratify every one who has watched the strong fight made by that paper during the last campaign. Great as was The Tribune under Horace Greeley, it has reached an unprecedented stature since. During election week, The Tribune actually sold 1,202,110 copies of its various editions, and then settled down to a "steady gait" with an average daily circulation of 124,000 and a weekly of 148,000. This is "breaking the record" beyond a doubt. It is well that the great Republican paper in the metropolis that is faithful to the principles for which we have fought for twenty-five years, and for which the battle must be renewed with determined vigor, should enter upon the new contest with such audience and consequent influence. It is a political duty to give The Tribune now the widest possible circulation. It is a tried and true, clean wholesome paper, complete as a newspaper and full of valuable special matter.

Sales 2,917 boxes; commissions 1.050? total 3,767 boxes. Ruling price 11c. Transactions of corresponding day in 1883, 1,623 boxes, 11c. ruling; in 1883, 2,141 boxes, 11¼c. ruling.

Parties who have sold cheese on the board and have not yet paid their dues, will have one more opportunity to settle on Monday next. They cannot complain if their names are published after that.

AT LITTLE FALLS.

Little Falls, Dec. 1st, 1884.

Cheese—There was a fair number of factory salesman here to-day, but most of them have come for the last time this season to sell cheese. All were anxious to close out the balance of stock on hand and the majority did so, altho' some of it is not ready for shipment. Most of these lots sold at 11c, and generally consisted of both every day and every other day cheese. The weather is growing so cold that factorymen are anxious to get off their stock before it becomes so severe as to render it hazerdous to send it. One sales day will pretty nearly wind up the cheese trade here, tho' there will be driblets selling till the new year comes in. Transactions to-day are.

Farm Daries.—Sales amount to 720 boxes about half of which was stock from the smaller factories. Prices ranged from 10 to 12c.; there was but one lot at either extreme, the bulk going at 11 to 11¼c.

Butter.—Seventy-two packages of farm dairy butter sold at 20 to 23c, nearly one-half of it at the latter figure. Of coarse the quality is not so good as when 26 and 27c. were common figures, but a part of the decline is to be accounted for by the over stocked condition of the city markets.

The entertainment terminating with an hour of genuine opera, written especially for them entitled "The Legend of Grey Beard's Rock." Mounted in the most lavish style, with elegant costumes, startling effects, imposing choruses, sparkling melodies, and a gorgeous denouncement of glittering splendor, under prismatic colored fires. Nothing like this on so grand and costly a scale has ever been attempted in minstrelsy, and it will be an event long to be remembered. Remember only one visit will be made this season, and tickets for the occasion can be purchased at Watson's drug store three days in advance. Below are a few of the many favorable press mentions:

A clean, bright, sparkling entertainment.[—Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye.

An interesting programme well rendered; a really excellent minstrel performance.[—Detroit (Mich.) Daily News.

Nothing of the kind ever gave such general satisfaction to an amusement loving people. To specify among so many artists would be invidious. They are all first class.[—Junction City (Kan.) Tribune.

Last evening the Venetian Tourbadoures were at the Opera House and all who were there enjoyed a rare treat. Their music is so sweet and harmonious that as one expressed it it was deliciously intoxicating. Senorina Morgan posseses a fine and well cultivated voice, and her manner on the stage is very charming. She was heartily encored at each appearance. The Troubadores are to be at the Opera House again this evening. We advise all not to miss hearing them. The prices have been reduced to 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children.

A Fulton Negro's Crime.

Rochester Post Express, Monday: In court this morning the case of Asa Dubois, the negro indicted for the murder of Reuben Cutchfield was called. The constables and jurors appeared and then A a Dubois was called before the bar and was asked if he desired to change his plea of not guilty to the indictment charging him with murder in the first degree. "Yes, sir," said the defendant, I plead guilty to manslaughter in the second degree." District Attorney Taylor immediately addressed the court and said that the plea was entirely satisfactory to him. It would be impossible he said, for the people to prove anything further than the mere killing of Reuben Cutchfield by the defendant. As far as known Dubois had made no threats against the man he killed. The quarrel which led to the tragedy grew out of the intimacy of the defendant with Mrs. Cutchfield. The defendant's counsel appealed to the court for mercy. In answer to the questions put to him, Dubois said he was born in Fulton, Oswego county, was 26 years of age, single and a waiter by occupation.

Dubois was sentenced to three years at hard labor at Auburn.

FULTON'S SENSATION.

Alleged Elopement of a Married Man and Woman.

The Fulton correspondent writes to the Palladium of yesterday as follows: Two people are missing from their accustomed places to-day, and the tongues of the gossips have been at work all day. The parties referred to are Mrs. Clarence Chase, the wife of a drayman, and James Sweet, who is also the owner of a dray. Mrs. Chase is about thirty years of age, while Mr. Sweet is more than ten years her senior. Both parties left town yesterday on different trains, and it is believed that they have eloped. It is said that Mrs. Chase and Sweet attended the Mexico fair together last fall and that their names have been linked together on several occasions. Mr. Chase is firmly impressed with the belief that his wife has eloped, and is said to have been around town to-day looking for a photograph of Sweet to send to different cities for the purpose of having the parties apprehended. Mrs. Chase leaves one child Mr. Sweet has one daughter grown up.

The arrangement is most excellent, and certainly will please teachers and meet a want long felt by them. Mrs. Bullock has a class in instrumental music in our village.—[Baldwinsville Gazette.

The Sunday Standard's Oswego correspondent says: There is considerable ciriminal business to be done at the county court which opens here on Monday. District Attorney Smith is nearly at the end of his term and is naturally anxious to close up his business as far as possible and hand over a clean record to his successor, S. B. Mead, of Granby. Rink Notes.

Messrs, Bogart & Eno will again appear at the rink. It will be remembered that the first appearance of these gentlmen was at the opening of the rink, when they gave a very satisfactory entertainment. As experts and acrobatic skaters they have no equal. They will be present at the rink to night and also to-morrow night.

The last race between Clark of Fulton, and Fayette of Oswego, of or the championship of the county came off in Oswego last evening. Clark was beaten by about one lap. He claims that he lost the race by constant slipping as no pomice was sprinkled on his portion of the route. Clark says he will race Fayette at any time in Syracuse for a sum of $50.

The attraction at the rink on Friday evening next will be the celebrated "Garden City" quartette. These colored musicians give an excellent entertainment. This is a new feature of amusement for the rink and no doubt will be liberally patronized. Prices as usual.

Miss Lola Ruggles gave three first-class exhibitions of fancy skating at the rink last week. At each appearance she was loudly applauded. She is graceful in her movements and is very good looking, which is more than can be said of any who have as yet visited this place.

The fancy dress carnival which occurred Thanksgiving night was a big hit for the rink. Over one thousand admission tickets were sold.

A Mere Farce.

The rumor that was afloat last week to the effect that Captain "Hank" Rice of this village, had, during last September, thrown his cook into the canal at Little Falls, proves to be erroneous in every particular. Mrs. Rice arrived in town last Wednesday accompanied by her niece and called at the this office at once for the purpose of rectifying the mistake. According to her statement she herself had acted as cook for her husband during the entire season, and said that no other woman had been aboard the boat during that time. The only reason Mrs. Rice could give for the course pursued by the driver, Lane, in circulating the story, was that he had done it out of revenge for a quarrel which took place between himself and her husband.

The Standard's Fulton correspondent says: Much satisfaction is felt over the announcement that the night trains on the Ontario & Western between New York and Oswego, both ways daily, will be continued through the winter months. A number of counties on this line are dependent entirely upon this road for an outlet, and the increased travel warrants the running of the night trains.

It is becoming quite customary of late for small boys to congregate in the various hall ways and entrances about the village during the evenings, blockading the way completely and making it unpleasant for persons, especially ladies, who wish to enter. It will be well for the police authorties to give the boys a gentle reminder that hallways is no place to meet to discuss the diabolical issue involved in the evening's programme.

Extraordinary Chance
—TO BUY—
CARPETS AND FURNITURE.

We have just placed on sale the following SPECIAL BARGAINS:

Elegant Velvet Carpets, only $1.25 per yd [illegible]

With all the modern [illegible] inventions; with all the [illegible] the "higher culture" and a more comprehensive understanding of [illegible] laws, a great amount of [illegible] material comes from the loom [illegible] a little "off" in texture and [illegible]. The loom has undergone great improvements since the days of my namesake and Andromache. The "breeches of Aaron" [illegible] were made [illegible] and may have been bought at a ready made clothing store. Joseph's coat of "many colors" Ned says was colored in the time of the Pharoahs who were in the dyeing business and who used kid instead of anoline.

I am not a woman that wishes to be looked upon as a martyr or one who suffers beyond thousands of others, but as one at my loom, in my domestic affairs, or in the education of my children as exercising some self denial; for how true has Emerson said, "there is a great deal of self denial and manliness in poor and middle-class houses, in town and country; that has not got into literature, and never will, but keeps the earth sweet; that saves on superfluities, and spends on essentials; that goes rusty, and educates the boy; that sells the horse, but builds the school; works early and late, takes two looms in the factory, three looms, but pays off the mortgage on the paternal farm, and then goes back cheerfully to work again.

Education in its broadest sense includes about all there is to be done in this lower sphere, which includes mental, moral and spiritual culture and growth. Physical training is not to be so much overlooked or despised as many mothers seem to think, as their girls and boys in later life give too palpable proof of, in disorders and deformed bodies and want of vital force. Ned and I have long since come to the conclusion that respectable (?) loafing and lounging around groceries and dramshops neither puts on healthy muscle or promotes mental or moral growth. The visible and invisible miasma that fills the air itself in these places is poisonous, and very contageous. Many of these roosting places for men and boys would be more truly indicated to the public by a red signal-light and flag. Familiarity and association is the first step that forges the chain that in after days and years is not easily broken. That these men and boys are stronger, that they can always drink and loaf in great moderation, temperately, (?) is the fatal delusion that is carrying them forward, and soon or late they will reinforce the army of habitual drinkers and confirmed drunkards.

I have hired a weaver to run my loom, as the mills are pressed with orders, while Ned and I, as is our custom went up to Ingalls Crossing and spent the Thanksgiving with our eldest daughter Jane. Her husband came down with the platform spring carriage and carried us up, including Josephine Andromache, our youngest daughter, who is spending her vacation at home before beginning her winter school at Lampson's Station. We had a very pleasant and long to be remembered visit. The ride was exilerating, although the leaves had fallen from the trees and a thin covering of snow whitened the ground, and the birds of the woods had gone to warmer climes and left the chattering sparrow and lonely crow sole possessor of the field and forest. The sheep and lowing kine were clustered on the sunny side of the barn and the "Langshan's" and Plymouth rock's were perched on the fence or roost, while the bronze turkeys filled the trees near by. Our hearts were moved with thankfulness and praise, as we especially, in sweet contemplation, were filled with the golden memories of the past, and the "grand possibilities of the future, when we should surround my thoughtful daughter's table, dressed in lightest brown and trimmed with sprigs of green should lie supinely, stuffed with sage and summer savory, a near relative of the happy family we had just seen perched in the tree! We turned aside to shed—the water that was filling our mouth. This we judge is the average overflow of Thanksgiving that finds expression in "man's obdurate heart" on our annual Thanks giving day. A life must have been, indeed, dark and sorrowful, that has no blessings to be thankful for, in which there were no sunny hours and the sombre cloud revealed no silver lining.

To Editor of the FULTON TIMES:

An article appeared in the last issue of THE TIMES in which I was made to pass in a disagreebble light. I have the honor of being the person spoken of as Granbyite and characterized as a defeated candidate for the hand of Mrs James Allen. I desire to say that I only considered the matter of marriage with Mrs. Allen after earnest solicitation on the part of that lady and her friends, and had the contest between my rival and myself been decided upon our respective merits and qualities as men I can have no doubt as to the result. But I am satisfied that some base and intriguing individuals deliberately plotted to destroy my happiness and thus brought about this condition of affairs. But I have to say in conclusion that I advanced $5 to be used as a wedding fee at the marriage of Mrs. Allen, with the understanding that I be the bridegroom on that occasion. Since my place was usurped by another it would seem no more than just that the victor return to me the money thus invested.

Yours,
PATRICK CRAHAN.

Going [illegible] work [illegible] ever of clearing [illegible] work that can be done now [illegible] in the rush of [illegible]

Cold frames, [illegible] will need ventilation by lifting the sash at the top; when the temperature is above freezing, remove the [illegible] altogether. Remove the [illegible] sashes, unless it [illegible] plants within the frame is frozen, when it may remain a week or more without doing harm. In mild weather remove it at once.

Roots, etc., in trenches, should have their final covering when the weather becomes steadily cold. Boards laid roof fashion over the straw, leaves, etc., used for covering, will allow the contents of the pits to be readily reached when covered with snow.

Celery is not injured by a slight freezing, but if the mass should heat, growth would begin and the celery would be hollow. The final covering, which should be about a foot thick, need not be put on until really cold weather. Celery in boxes in the cellar must be kept as cool as possible without freezing.

Cellars of the house must sometimes be used for storing vegetables and fruit, though this should be avoided if possible. It is well to have a thermometer in the cellar, and to keep the temperature as near thirty-five degrees as possible. Cover all roots in a warm cellar with dry earth to prevent wilting.

Horseradish is generally used only in the spring, but may be had all winter by storing the roots in a trench, or in the cellar in a box with earth.

Squashes and sweet potatoes, to keep well, require a temperature of about sixty degrees. Look over the squashes occasionally, handling carefully, and remove for use those that show signs of decay.

Winter Work.—Store away all seeds that have been saved, with name and date.... Repair all implements and machines.... Markers, dibbles, stakes, and other garden conveniences should be made on stormy days. If muck can be had within hauling distance, secure a large pile and let it freeze.—American Agriculturist.

Exhaustion by Roots.

We have frequently had occasion to observe the injury to herbaceous plants and small shrubs from the influence of trees standing at a distance. A writer in Gardening Illustrated mentions a strong case. He found some tea roses dying and on examination discovered that the roots of a white poplar had extended under a hawthorne hedge and beneath a border seven feet wide, and had exerted a fatal influence on the roses. The roots of the tree were three fourths of an inch thick at twenty feet distance from the trunk. A case occurred under our own observation, where the plants in a circular bed of roses, deeply dug and highly enriched, were feeble in growth, and with few and small flowers, although exposed to sunlight. The difficulty was that some trees at a distance had thrown their long roots into this bed. Another bed was made, away from any trees, and the roses removed to it, where they have grown and bloomed luxuriantly. The first bed was planted with verbenas, and these have grown and flowered profusely, being less sensitive than the roses. There is no doubt that shrubs and harbaceous plants sometimes become feeble and die from mysterious causes when the trouble is nothing but long roots.—[Country Gentleman.

Live Stock Jottings.

There is a very close analogy in regard to health and disease between man and animals. For himself the farmer provides pure water, pure air and pure food; and he is careful to avoid uncleanliness in his dwelling and around it; because he knows that neglect of these precautions will surely provoke disease. And when he hears of infections prevailing in his neighborhood, he redoubles his care and watchfulness. Years ago there were epidemics of the most fatal character, which prevailed at intervals, some yearly and some every few years. At last it was discovered that filth produced them all—cholera, yellow fever, scarlet fever, typhoid fever and small pox. By the enforcement of sanitary precautions the public health has been preserved and thousands of lives have been saved. When good and necessary for mankind in this respect, it is also requisite for the welfare of our animals; and if we would save them from these very diseases—all the products of uncleanliness in food, water and lodging, and encouraged by unwholesome feeding—we must simply use the very same sanitary precautions.

One of the Coming Cattle Men of the Country.

Francis Granger Babcock, President of the Bank of Hornellsville, N. Y., was born in this state in 1831 and was named by his Grandfather after Francis Granger of Canandaigua, a gentleman of national reputation and much admired, and particularly so by the grandparent. Commencing in life a poor boy F. G. Babcock by his untiring energy and quick perception and his firm adherence to his friends has become a man of prominence in the state. His herd of imported cattle now numbering some 175 head, together with the additions that his sons and his nephew and his farm manager, who are now on their way to London, England, will soon [illegible] the Babcock Stock Farms will [illegible] among the first in the nation.—[illegible] York Graphic.

[illegible] her first look at [illegible] then smell and rub her nose, and [illegible] against it, and then placed it upon [illegible] vehicles and touch them with her nose.

After a few days of such exercise I hitched her up to a sleigh—in the open field, so nothing could obstruct the sight—alongside of [illegible] a fast trotting and very gentle gelding. Some snow had fallen the night before, and only a few sleighs had passed over it, just enough to show the track. One man stood at her head to hold her, while another jumped into the sleigh to drive. All ready, he touched the gelding with his whip, and he instantly started at a rapid gait. The filly gave a wild jump and then attempted to kick up behind, but her mate in the harness moved so rapidly she had no time for such action—in fact had to gallop smartly to keep up with the other's rapid trot. After a couple miles in this way she began to tire a little, when the driver slacked up the gelding to a slower pace, and she settled into a square trot.

Soon after this he turned the sleigh and returned home, gradually trotting slower and slower, till the last half mile, which he finished in a walk. The profuse sweat caused from her first rapid action had nearly dried up when unharnessed and put into the stable. She was then well blanketed and when well cooled rubbed down. We used her with this fast horse alone—it being necessary because she herself had a fast natural gait—for over eight months before harnessing her single to a sleigh, and subsequently to a light wagon and buggy, and never had any trouble with her. She retained her high spirit and wanted to move rapidly on the road, but was always gentle, never offered to kick or rear or run away in harness or under the saddle. She rarely shired and then only slightly, and proved one of the safest and most serviceable road horses I ever owned.—[A. B. Allen.

How to Make Cider Vinegar.

Vinegar is made by the union of the oxygen of the air with the sugar of the cider, and the more the cider is exposed to the air, the quicker the change, and a temperature of about 100° is the most favorable to the transformation. You can change the cider into vinegar in about three days by procuring a tub or tank 10 feet long and 18 inches in diameter; place it on end in a warm room and fill it with clean corn-cobs broken into two-inch lengths. First saturate the cobs with strong vinegar by allowing it to run into the top, in a very small stream, and gradually trickle down through the cobs. When they have once been fully saturated with this strong vinegar, mix one-fourth cider with more vinegar and allow this to run through in the same way, gradually substituting a larger portion of cider until fermentation sets in, which can be told by the cobs becoming quite warm. Several holes, one inch in diameter, should be bored in the sides of the tub about one foot from the bottom, for the purpose of admitting air, and the amount of air admitted should be regulated so as to control the heat. As soon as the heat is at 120° or more, clear cider sufficiently "worked" to have become free from pomace, may be substituted for the mixture, and if properly regulated, it will come out very fair vinegar, or at most the second time going through will perfect it; but all these rapid-process vinegars are inclined to be a little bitter, and are not as well flavored as those made in casks by filling them about two-thirds full, keeping them in a warm room, say at 100°, drawing out the cider and pouring it back slowly through the bung-hole about twice a week. In this way it will become vinegar very quickly.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Silk pocket handkerchiefs and dark blue cotton will not fade if dipped in salt water when new.

Old linen should be carefully preserved, as it is always useful in sickness; afterward it can be washed and scraped into lint.

It is said that a few drops of carbolic acid—that is, ten drops in one pint of water—will if poured over the earth in flower pots, kill all living things except the plants.

If any one is fatigued the best restorative is hot milk, a tumbler of the beverage as hot as it may be sipped. This is far more of a restorative than alcoholic drink.

Dust, and marks of children's fingers can be removed from icy windows these cold days by using a sponge to wipe them which you have dipped in a little ammonia and water.—[The Cottage Hearth.

Coffee pounded in a mortar and roasted on an iron plate, sugar burned on hot coals, and vinegar boiled in myrrh and sprinkled on the floor and furniture of the sick room are excellent deodorizers.

Some one asks how fruit jellies can be preserved from mould. If the surface is covered one-fourth of an inch deep with leaf sugar, finely pulverized, they will keep in good condition and no mould penetrate.

"I shall never call on Mrs. Smith again," said Mrs. Jones. "I never want to see her any more."

"You women are very foolish to quarrel over trifles," said Mr. Jones. "Mrs. Smith is a very pleasant person, a little talkative, perhaps, but on the whole a very estimable woman. You shouldn't attach any importance to what she says. What was the trouble?"

"She said you weren't very prompt in paying your debts."

"That's the first time I ever heard of a spare room having teeth," responded the smart Aleck of a clerk. This celebrated remedy can now be obtained in the usual dry vegetable form, or in liquid form. It is put up in the latter way for the especial benefit of those who cannot readily prepare it. It will be found very concentrated and will act with equal efficiency in either form. Read advertisement.

Bob Burdette: In days of old, when knights were bold and stole for a living, a serenade was a romantic little open air concert, at which a gentleman dressed up like a fire-proof safe twankled a long-necked guitar under the windows of his love and told her all about it in eight lines and a chorus. It was a very pretty, romantic, poetic sort of a thing, although its starlit beauty was liable to be married now and then by the entrance of a burglar with a battle ax, with which he picked the lock of the fire-proof casting and perforated a large hole in the person of the love lorn knight, and married the girl himself. In either case the young lady was married and so she did'nt have to waste her wedding toggery.

Look Out For Your Head!

No matter what parts it may finally affect, catarrh always starts in the head, and belongs to the head. There is no mystery about the origin of this direful disease. It begins in a neglected cold. One of the kind that is "sure to be better in a few days." Thousands of victims know how it is by sad experience. Ely's Cream Balm cures colds in the head and catarrh in all its stages. Dear Sir—About eight years ago I began to suffer from a Liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I cannot describe better than [illegible] sensation. [illegible] From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to any business. This covered a period of a year. Nature seemed to be set going again. How Watch Cases are Made.

This process of manufacture was invented by James Boss, who started in business in 1854, and the methods and tools used in making these watch cases are covered by patents. This is the only watch case made under this process. For many years the introduction of these goods was slow, owing to popular prejudice against "plated" goods, but gradually the public learned that the James Boss' Gold Watch Case was not a cheap gold-washed or electro-plated article, but was made of genuine gold plates of standard quality and thickness. Conscientious adherence to the determination to make the best watch case ever put on the market, and the adoption of every improvement suggested, has made the James Boss' Gold Watch Case the STANDARD. In this watch case the parts most subject to wear—the bow, crown, hinges, thumb-catches, etc., are made of SOLID GOLD.

Flirting With Strangers.

The practice of flirting with strangers on the street, in the horse car, in restaurants, &c., "just for fun," without the shadow of an introduction, at best under cover of some flimsy pretext which is at once understood by the opposite party, has grown prevalent.

Don't do it girls. You may have as much pride of character and self respect as the most punctilious, well bred lady who stands upon strict etiquette, but you won't get credit for it.

"But it's such fun to lead them on awhile and then make fools of them."

Don't delude yourselves. They don't see the matter from your standpoint. In nine cases out of ten you make yourselves ridiculous in their eyes, and pamper their self-conceit, which was too well fed before.

We know innocent, pure minded girls do such things thoughtlessly—for love of mischief—one leading the other. But if they could hear the sly innuendos and covert insinuations with which they are coupled afterward, their slumbering, womanly instinct would be aroused, and they would blush with mortified shame at the motives imputed to them.

The danger of incidental harm to the community, or to certain classes of people, from the increased use of machinery, the extension of public works, etc., is greatly diminished when those who make the laws, and especially those whose duty it is to interpret them, recognize that law is a progressive science; that it is a means, not an end; that when a state of things arises for which there was no precedent, a new precedent must be made. How the most enlightened jurists hold this principle constantly in view, and how the common as well as the statute law is thus made to keep pace with the general advance of civilization, is admirably set forth in the leading article in the North American Review for December, "Labor and Capital before the Law," by Judge T. M. Cooley, of Michigan. To the same number, William K. Ackerman contributes some suggestive "Notes on Railway Management." Dr. Schliemann tells what he found in his excavations of the ruins of Tiryns, in southern Greece, and Principal Shairp supplements his scholarly article on "Friendship in Ancient Poetry," with one on "Friendship in English Poetry." The other articles in the number are, "The British House of Lords," by George Ticknor Curtis, and "Responsibility for State Roguery," by John F. Hume.

The Storm.

BY [illegible]

Ye hills and dales and rocks of ages,
Ye mighty lakes and boundless seas,
And tempest dread, which grandly rages
O'er hearts oppressed with fierce decrees;

Proclaim from whence, ye powers stupendous,
Proclaim from whence your terrors roar,
Lashing the world with thews tremendous,
Dashing mad seas from shore to shore.

My soul is wrapt in stygian wonder
O'er lurid bursts and tongues of fire,
As demons rend the vault asunder
With rumblings vast, and thund'rings dire.

Now madly sweeps the wild tornado,
With lightning orbits streaming hair;
Now sovereign swells the fell crusade
Along the wing'd cimmerian air.

Erebus black outpours his legions,
Convolving on the lightning's beat,
Then plunging into godless regions,
To gambol in the rolling heat.

The North and West in awe augmenting,
A huge colossus rears his form,
And, to the furies mad consenting,
He lifts the floodgates of the storm.

My life takes wing and upward charges
The demons red to battle's wage;
Valor the bonds of earth enlarges,
And high transcends the fury's rage.

From centre wild to whirling border
The furies rock and rush in pain,
While teems the spheres in crazed disorder,
Till hells are quenched in torrent rain.

—Without the Cross there's no appeasement
In sun or sky, on land or sea;
Like man, all things need God's chastisement,
To Him all words must bend the knee.

A LEAF,

Torn From the Daily Record of Hospital Life; By the Wandering Jew.

(Written for The Times.)

"All was ended now, the hope, and the fear, and the sorrow,
All the aching of heart, the restless, unsatisfied longing,
All the dull, deep pain, and constant anguish of patience!
And, as she pressed, once more the lifeless head to her bosom,
Meekly she bowed her own, and murmured, "Father I thank Thee!"
—Longfellow's Evangeline.

It was in the hospital, that Longfellow immortalized, when he told us of Evangeline, that I witnessed the following incident, and at the time the nurse in attendance, said that it might be called a leaf torn from the daily record of hospital life."

One scene was so highly colored, and dramatic, that I likened it to an impossible act from the present sensational melo-drama; it was so impressed on my memory, that the succeeding years have failed to erase it. And coming to me now, fills me with a feeling akin to sorrow and pity.

It was in the dead house, in a small, dimly lighted room, that was haunted with the ghosts of generations; of people who had died violent deaths, had lived in want and squalor, had walked the lower plains of life, and ended their miserable careers in midnight brawls and bar-room fights, and also the victims of their own and others carlessness. The remains of all these, were here placed, awaiting either the care of friends, or the pauper grave-yard on the morrow. I remember on this evening going down the long wards, of the main building; between the iron cots, covered with snowey linen, under which, some pale faced sufferer, lay fighting the battle of life or death.

Then down into the basement, past a row of heavily barred cells, on the doors of which you can read "Alcoholism," and the patients name, and date of admission. I can hear yet the cries of those unfortunates, that liquor had reduced to brutes. I can see them in their padded cells, their glaring eyes, and distorted features, as they battled with snakes and devils with which their fevered imagination surrounded. Can I ever forget these people, with their restless eyes, inhuman faces, writhing bodies, and hideous cries. Oh! that I could paint such scenes with the brush of dove that all the world might see and know. We passed down the long hall into the open air, across the paved court and into the building used as receiving ward and dead house. In the latter apartment the gas was burning low, but I could distinguish on the slab, a human form covered with a sheet.

In the brighter light, and when the cloth was removed from the face, I saw the haggard features of a young woman who evidently had in former years enjoyed the comforts of a happy home. Her blonde hair was matted down with clotted blood, that flowed from an open wound on the head. The once bright blue eyes, fixed and glassy, stared at the ceiling; her finely cut lips, parted just enough to show the teeth, two of which were broken out. One of her ears was cruelly torn, and the marks of strangling fingers were visible on her delicate necks. The face was flushed and showed the sure signs of debauchery. Her form was still beautiful but not what it must have been when she was younger and in her father's home. While gazing at the human wreck, the nurse told me what she knew of the woman before us. In the early evening she had been brought in by two policemen, and she was at the time stupidly drunk. Her face and clothing was covered with blood, and while the doctors examination was in progress, she raised up on the cot, gave a hideous yell and fell backwards a corpse.

As no one had claimed the body it was placed in the dead house, with the rough board coffin, and on the morrow was to be buried in the potter's field; another of a great citie's unknown dead.

This woman had lived in one of the [illegible] dives on the Delaware water front, and on this evening the inmates engaged in a free fight; the result of which we saw before us. She had been [illegible] [illegible] door, but there we met a hospital attendant, accompanied by a middle-aged couple. They were richly dressed, and both looked so stately and proud that they were sadly out of place in the room. The nurse again uncovered the face of the dead, and the woman looked —and fainted. The man then gazed at the face before him. His fingers began to tighten, his lips quivered and tears came to his eyes. He stood there with bowed head, and I almost expected to see the corpse raise up and cry: Father, forgive me! But no! The gentleman with an effort recovered his composure, and motioning the attendant to cover the corpse, he raised his wife from the floor, and bore her from our sight. He did not speak, and had it not been for his emotion we would not have known that he was in any way related to the dead girl. The rattle of the cab wheels outside the wall, told us they were gone, and they never came back to claim the remains of their wayward girl. The next day she was buried at the city's expense; nameless, and disgraced, without a single christian word spoken over her grave, and even in death, driven out of the hearts of those who should have relented, without one thought of her past life. I would like to have met and known that cold-hearted couple, and learned from them the balance of the girl's history. Where, and how she had lived, and why she had left home, and friends, to lead the life that had placed her before my eyes, as

"One more unfortunate
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death!"

The Sherry We Drink.

A cable dispatch states that the London medical papers are making an outcry over the [illegible] of poison which they [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] "Why, [illegible] can turn [illegible] person to the [illegible] you would find in a den of rattlesnakes. Oil and ether? Why, they can supply you with an unlimited variety of them in some of what is called the genuine article or choice old brands of sherry. The acetic, butyric, chloric, nitric, and sulphuric ethers, and even the lead can be manufactured by the aid of alum alkalies, and acids."

"Those who ship sherry," said a dealer in American wines, when questioned on the subject, "know how to drug and fix it for the American market and have it pass off as genuine. Very seldom one bottle of what could be honestly called the real article ever reaches these shores. As in liquors, tobacco, caustic potassa, red pepper, aqua fortis and oil of vitriol are frequently to be found, so in some brands of sherry there are ingredients which the widest stretch of the imagination never would conjure up."

"I recollect some years ago," said a pharmacist this afternoon, "there was a manufacturer in Chambers street who was detected in using lead coated vats in the manufacture of sherry. The English medical authorities would have something to add to their denunciations of sherry if they had the American adultrations mixed with those of Hamburg."

"Almost as bad as the poison of the Borgias?"

"My dear sir, if the poison of the Borgias were in the market to-day they would likely be used as flavoring extracts for sherry and other wines. Their vaunted potency would be of no avail at the present period. They would encounter poisons used in the manufacture of our wines which would make them appear utterly insignificant as curtailers of life. Even electricity is brought into requisition to tone up some wines."

"How is that"

He also says that although he reports for the past year the smallest percentage of circulation of counterfeit paper money since the first issue of such money, he is of opinion that there are to-day in the hands of counterfeiters nearly $800,000 of new spurious notes of the denominations of $10 and $20, which have been produced since Jan. 1, 1884.

ONE BOTTLE INSTEAD OF A DOZEN.

"And it took only one bottle to do it," said a gentleman, speaking of Parker's Hair Balsam. I had a run of fever, and when I got well of that my hair began to fall out so fast as to alarm me. I really didn't know what to do, until one day a friend said, "Try Parker's Hair Balsam." That was some months ago. What surprised me was the fact that one bottle was enough. I expected to use up a dozen." Clean, highly perfumed, not oily, not a dye. Restores original color. 31w4

CLEVERLY CAUGHT.

The Rich Man's Fear of Burglars—The Story of an Electrician.

Buffalo, N. Y., News.

At the dead of night, Mr. J. B. Anthony, a wholesale grocer of Troy, N. Y., was awakened by his burglar alarm annunciator, which told him that his house had been entered through the roof scuttle. He hastily dresses, rings for a policeman, hurries to the upper story, and hears the burglar in the servant's room threatening her with instant death if she made a loud noise.

He was captured, convicted, and sentenced to Sing Sing prison for ten years.

So said Mr. C. H. Westfall, the electrician of Westfield, N. Y., to our reporter.

"Do city residents generally use burglar alarms?"

"Yes, all first-class house are provided with them and I have never had any dissatisfaction from my customers, many of whom are the best known and wealthiest people of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other large cities."

"Do wealthy men have much fear of burglars?"

"As a rule, wealthy men do not keep valuables in their house, and yet they are not sure that they shall escape burglarious attacks, and they don't feel secure without a first-class burglar alarm apparatus in their house. Every door, window and scuttle is connected with the annunciator, and it is quite impossible to effect an entrance without the fact becoming at once known."

"Don't electricians run considerable risk in handling wires?"

"Even the most careful of them sometimes get a shock. A few years ago, while I was descending stairs at Elmira, N. Y., with a wire coil in my hand, I felt as if I had received the entire charge from the battery, for near a half hour I suffered the keenest agony. [illegible] [illegible]

CURE FOR PILES.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose that he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like prespiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, bleeding and itching piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and affecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Address The Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., Piqua, O. Sold by M. M. Williams. 29tf

The Best Bed.

Of the eight pounds which a man eats and drinks during the day, it is estimated that no less than five pounds leaves the body through the skin And of these five pounds considerable escapes during the night. This, being a greater part gaseous in form, permeates every part of the bed. Thus all parts of the bed—mattress, blankets, as well as sheets—soon become foul, and need purification.

The mattress needs this renovation quite as much as the sheets.

To allow the sheets to be used without washing or changing for three or six months would be regarded as bad housekeeping; but I insist, if a thin sheet can absorb enough of the poisonous excretions of the body to make it unfit for use in a few days, a thick mattress which can absorb and retain a thousand times as much of these poisonous exhalations, needs to be purified as often certainly as once in three months. A sheet can be washed. A mattress cannot be renovated in that way. Indeed, there is no other way of cleaning a mattress but by steaming it or picking it to pieces, and thus in fragments exposing it to the direct rays of the sun. As these processes are scarcely practicable with any of the ordinary mattresses, I am decidedly of the opinion that the good, old-fashioned straw bed, which can every three months be exchanged for fresh straw, and the tick washed, is the sweetest of beds. If in the winter season the pourousness of the straw bed makes it a little uncomfortable, spread over it two woolen blankets, which should be washed. With this arrangement, if you wash all the bed-covering often, you will have a sweet, healthful bed.

Now, if you leave the bed to air, with open windows during the day, and not make it up for the night before evening, you will have added greatly to the sweetness of your rest, and, in consequence, to the tone of your health.

I heartily wish this good change could be everywhere introduced. Only those who have attended to this important matter can judge of its influence on the general health and spirits.

JOHN A. MCKAY - - EDITOR

WHY WE DID IT!

This week we paint our paper red because we want all our readers and The Times neighborhood to know that we still live and have our being in the land of progress—business and prosperity. We shall endeavor to edit and publish a good paper—one that you will not be ashamed to take to your neighbor and have him read. We shall try to do more than this. We shall try to print a paper so good that you will feel that it is a paper worth preserving and one that you will not only ask your neighbor to read, but will ask him to subscribe for. We want to make one useful to every [illegible], to be a physician of the public, to [illegible] a high standard of morals; to [illegible] or to approve when needed; to [illegible] the stumbling blocks in the way of [illegible] progress [illegible] may go onward untrammeled. We mean to time the pulse accurately, to check the fever heat and to put life into the slow throbs of business depression. We realize the delicacy of our position, but readers, you need not have a fear, for unless we are able to fill the bill we have made out, we shall give way to others more capable. We have too much love for a people's welfare to ever stand in the way of public progress, and we believe there is no way in which a people [illegible] advanced so rapidly as by a newspaper of the right stamp.

THE [illegible]

The question of the [illegible] of the National Bank [illegible] is being strongly agitated by the press. National Banks are commercial institutions and live only so long as their profits are sufficient. The continued reduction of the public debt and the increase of the premium for government bonds are gradually lessening the banking profits. The late reports show that National Bank circulation is decreasing at the rate of $25,000,000 annually, and that coin circulation is increasing at the rate of $55,000,000 annually. If this continues for a few years our National Banks will be wiped out. The tendency is toward their non-existance, but matters may be so arranged as to continue them. The public debt may be continued, money coinage may be stopped, but it is not probable. The question will doubtless come up in Congress and remedies supplied. The movements in this direction will be watched with deep interest.

From many parts of the country we hear of great business depression and in our own village we feel it to a certain extent. But although we may receive some of the effects of this depression it does not seem to us that it will effect us largely. However we advise all our friends to earn just as much money as they can honestly and spend it judiciously. It is a good policy to save your money when others spend it and to spend it when others save. Property has decreased in value in Fulton this year and business is not worth now what it was some months previous. Nearly everything is cheaper. There is a probability that this may continue for a time. We say then save your money now, and when bottom prices are reached and the public grip on its purse is tightest, open your money bag and invest. Then when the flush times come and prices go up, sell. Watch the times and in your saving and in your spending, be judicious.

Society circles in Washington and New York were shocked last Wednesday over the announcement of the secret marriage of Miss Mary Willard, daughter of a wealthy citizen of Washington and an officer in the late rebellion, to William Paxtor, a prominent young patent lawyer of that city. Great preparations were under way for the marriage of Miss Willard to Frank [illegible] of Kansas City, son of a wealthy New York banker, which had [illegible] announced would take [illegible]

[illegible] of the opinion that [illegible] will be a formidable candidate.

The number of elopements, suicides and murders committed in this country in the past two weeks is astonishing. The columns of the daily papers have been filled with accounts of crimes most horrible.

Francis D. Moulton of New York city, who figured prominently in the Beecher-Tilton scandal in 1870, died very suddenly of paralysis in that city last Wednesday, aged 49 years. It will be remembered that Tilton confided his troubles to Mr. Moulton and sought friendly advice, whereupon Moulton received the title of "Our Mutual Friend."

The Senatorial contest is beginning to develop into great interest. It is of vast importance that New York State shall ably represented in the Senate. The selection seems to be narrowed down to three names, President Arthur, Levi P. Morton minister to France, ex-chairman Warren of the republican state committee, and possibly Chauncy Depew and Frank Hiscock of Syracuse. The republicans are strenuously at work trying not to get into another Senatorial fight. President Arthur's friends seem at present to be in the lead and are making a hard still fight. The president it is claimed will have no struggling, but will accept the position if chosen by the whole party. In the meantime he is very reticent.

Last week we printed two hundred extra copies of The Times. The call for them [illegible] this week [illegible] hundred more [illegible]. We [illegible] and intend to have it [illegible]. Our business [illegible] their liberal patronage. We shall see that they [illegible] full measure [illegible] to help the [illegible] will find that the [illegible] read and [illegible] will pay [illegible] out their shingle [illegible] columns. We intend [illegible] edition of The Times and [illegible] 1,000 extra copies. It is by such means that we advance the interests of our patrons.

Many of our most intelligent men are of the opinion that this country will be visited with a dreadful plague, probably the cholera, the coming season, and throughout the whole country the people [illegible] are urgently persuaded upon to take all necessary precaution to ward off this dreadful pestilence. The fact that the cholera appeared in [illegible] two years ago, and that it [illegible] life [illegible]

The [illegible] conference [illegible] at Berlin is likely to become one of our important civilizing agencies. The governments of Belgium, Germany and the United States are the ones interested. The Congo country is a fertile region on the west coast of South Africa, containing about [illegible] square miles, with [illegible] inhabitants. In this valley of the Congo river are found Ostrich feathers, ivory, hides, cocoa, coffee, yams, peanuts, rubber, palm oil and very many other articles of great value. The river is navigable for a short distance only. The river empties into the ocean with such force that it drives the salt water out to sea for a distance of two hundred miles. Henry M. Stanley is the principal figure in the association. It is called the International African Association, and came into existence a few years ago chiefly through the influence of Leopold II, King of Belgium. Gen. Henry S. Sanford ex-minister to Belgium is now before the conference with a plan for a railway from Vivi to Stanley Pools. Prince Bismark is much interested in the scheme for developing the country. Colonel Williams, one of our most widely known colored men has devoted much time to the study of the subject and expresses great hopes for the future of the country.

We have had a very sudden death in this town. Mrs. J. E. Sampson appeared well as usual last Tuesday morning. Her husband went to a neighbors to assist in butchering, that morning. On returning home about 2 o'clock p. m. and entering the house he discovered his wife dead on a bedroom floor. Dr. Todd was soon summoned and no marks of violence was discovered an apparent struggling in her death. She had partly prepared dinner. Her two children aged 4 and 2 years of age were with her. She was 23 years of age, she and her husband lived very happily together. The funeral was held to-day. Rev. Mr. Snyder of Gilberts Mills, the clergyman who married them six years ago, preached a very excellent discourse at the residence.

Thursday morning a fire broke out in the hollow ware shop of the Elmira reformatory, destroying the supply room, the pattern shop, the foundry and office. The loss of Contractor Daniel M. Thompson of Elmira is $15,000. The state's loss is $500. Both losses are covered by insurance. The burned buildings are detached from the main structure and the fire in no way endangered the reformatory or the inmates.

[illegible] of the [illegible] was [illegible] Tuesday, when a son of Robert Breckenridge, of Lexington Ky., entered accompanied by a friend. He demanded in high Kentucky style the name of the author of a recent published article concerning his father, in which the latter is charged with misappropriation of $160,000. Mr. Roe said the the story was printed by the Enquirer, and was also transmitted by the Associated Press, and he did not know the author. Young Breckenridge contradicted him flatly, and upon Mr. Roe adding that he believed the article originated with the Louisville Post, he was again flatly contradicted. Mr. Roe then said: 'If you know more about it than I do what did you come here for?' and intimated that immediate retirement of his visitors was in order. Breckenridge then lifted his cane and Mr. Roe arose in his place to ward off the threatened blow. Meanwhile several attaches of the office, have been attracted by the loud talk appeared on the scene, whereupon the gentleman from Kentucky did strike the threatened blow, and drawing a revolver from his over coat pocket, backed with his friend down stairs, threatening to shoot Mr. Roe if he followed. The latter followed, hoping to find the private watchman of the place at the foot of the stairs and to give the belligerent gentleman into custody. Breckenridge, however, did not shoot, but succeeded in retiring with great rapidity and without being arrested. The matter was given into the charge of the police, who have not yet found their man."

Mr. Roe, who thus possibly followed the [illegible], is the son of the Rev. Andrew Roe, of Fulton.

However we advise all our friends to earn just as much money as they can honestly and spend it judiciously. It is a good policy to save your money when others spend it and to spend it when others save. Property has decreased in value in Fulton this year and business is not worth now what it was some months previous. Nearly everything is cheaper. There is a probability that this may continue for a time. We say then save your money now, and when bottom prices are reached and the public grip on its purse is tightest, open your money bag and invest. Then when the flush times come and prices go up, sell. Watch the times and in your saving and in your spending be judicious.

SOCIETY circles in Washington and New York were shocked last Wednesday over the announcement of the secret marriage of Miss Mary Willard, daughter of a wealthy citizen of Washington and an officer in the late rebellion, to William Paxtor, a prominent young patent lawyer of that city. Great preparations were under way for the marriage of Miss Willard to Frank Simpson, of Kansas City, son of a wealthy New York banker, which had been generally announced would take place next Thursday. It appears that Paxton was an old lover, but that it was the desire of Miss Willard's parent's to have her marry Simpson, they supposing their daughter was desirous of his hand. Both families are much chagrined over the affair. After the marriage the two departed for parts unknown. Mr. Simpson is a rich man and had just completed a $100,000 house in Kansas City, which he was to occupy [illegible] with immediately after their marriage. Simpson seems to take his [illegible] very hard.

JOHN A. MCKAY - - EDITOR

WHY WE DID IT!

This week we paint our paper red because we want all our readers and THE TIMES neighborhood to know that we still live and have our being in the land of progress—business and prosperity. We shall endeavor to edit and publish a good paper—one that you will not be ashamed to take to your neighbor and have him read. We shall try to do more than this. We shall try to print a paper so good that you will feel that it is a paper worth preserving and one that you will not only ask your neighbor to read, but will ask him to subscribe for. We want to make ourselves useful to every household, and as a physician of the public, to sustain a high standard of morals; to chastize or to approve when needed; to point out the stumbling blocks in the way of local progress or to indicate when the march may go onward untrameled. We mean to time the pulse accurately; to check the fever beats and to put life into the slow throbs of business depression. We realize the delicacy of our position, but readers, you need not have a fear, for unless we are able to fill the bill we have made out, we shall give way to others more capable. We have too much love for a people's welfare to ever stand in the way of public progress, and we believe there is no way in which a people is advanced so rapidly as by a newspaper of the right stamp.

THE TREATY WITH SPAIN.

According to the text of the new treaty with Spain, which is to be presented to the senate for ratification, the tariff upon sugar and cigars from Cuba and Porta Rico is to be greatly reduced. In return many of the products of the United States are to be admitted to these countries free of duty. There are many pros and cons to the subject. It will certainly pinch seriously our sugar planters and tobacco raisers. It will reduce our revenue from tobacco and sugar materially. Whether the United States will receive benefits sufficient to counterbalance this loss is a question. When we have looked the matter over carefully, we will speak of it in detail.

THE question of the duration of our National Bank system is being strongly agitated by the press. National Banks are commercial institutions and live only so long as their profits are sufficient. The continued reduction of the public debt and the increase in the premium for government bonds are gradually lessening the banking profits. The late reports show that National Bank circulation is decreasing at the rate of $25,000,000 annually, and that coin circulation is increasing at the rate of $55,000,000 annually. If this continues for a few years our National Banks will be wiped out. The tendency is toward their non-existance, but matters may be so arranged as to continue them. The public debt may be continued, money coinage may be stopped, but it is not probable. The question will doubtless come up in Congress and remedies supplied. The movements in this direction will be watched with deep interest.

FROM many parts of the country we hear of great business depression and in our own village we feel it to a certain extent. But although we may receive some of the effects of this depression it does not seem to us that it will effect us largely. However we advise all our friends to earn just as much money as they can honestly and spend it judiciously. It is a good policy to save your money when others spend it and to spend it when others save. Property has decreased in value in Fulton this year and business is not worth now what it was some months previous. Nearly everything is cheaper. There is a probability that this may continue for a time. We say then save your money now, and when bottom prices are reached and the public grip on its purse is tightest, open your money bag and invest. Then when the flush times come and prices go up, sell. Watch the times and in your saving and in your spending be judicious.

Society circles in Washington and [illegible]

[illegible] remembered that Tilton confided his troubles to Mr. Moulton and sought friendly advice, whereupon Moulton received the title of "Our Mutual Friend."

THE Senatorial contest is beginning to develop into great interest. It is of vast importance that New York State shall ably represented in the Senate. The selection seems to be narrowed down to three names, President Arthur, Levi P. Morton minister to France, ex-chairman Warren of the republican state committee, and possibly Chauncy Depew and Frank Hiscock of Syracuse. The republicans are strenuously at work trying not to get into another Senatorial fight. President Arthur's friends seem at present to be in the lead and are making a hard still fight. The president it is claimed will have no struggling, but will accept the position if chosen by the whole party. In the meantime he is very reticent.

LAST week we printed two hundred extra copies of THE TIMES. The call for them has been so great that this week we shall print three hundred more extra copies. We paint it red this week and intend to have it read. Our business men are beginning to appreciate our efforts by their liberal patronage. We shall see that they secure full measures in return, for we intend to help those that help us, and those that are deserving of success. Our advertisers will find that this issue will be extensively read and that it will pay them to hang out their shingle in these columns. We intend getting out a fine Christmas edition of THE TIMES and to print 1,000 extra copies. It is by such means that we advance the interests of our patrons.

MANY of our most intelligent men are of the opinion that this country will be visited with a dreadful plague, probably the cholera, the coming season, and throughout the whole country the people the people are urgently persuaded upon to take all necessary precaution to ward off this dreadful pestilence. The fact that the cholera appeared in Asia two years ago, and that it visited Europe the past season with untold destruction of life, proves to us without a doubt that it is fast traveling westward and cannot help but reach our shores. Many remember the destruction caused by this disease in 1849, first commencing in the east in 1847, spreading into Europe in 1848, and finally visiting the United States in 1849. Let the people of this village therefore, take precaution. Do not let filth accumulate about your premises, see that your drains are in proper order and that your cellars are thoroughly cleansed. We have called the attention of our readers to this fact before and you will agree with us that nothing will be lost by being prepared. Sanitary reform is what we insist upon.

THE Congo Conference now in session at Berlin is likely to become one of our important civilizing agencies. The governments of Belgium, Germany and the United States are the ones interested. The Congo country is a fertile region on the west coast of South Africa, containing about 900,000 square miles, with 50,000,000 inhabitants. In this valley of the Congo river are found Ostrich feathers, ivory, hides, cocoa, coffee, yams, peanuts, rubber, palm oil and very many other articles of great value. The river is navigable for a short distance only. The river empties into the ocean with such force that it drives the salt water out to sea for a distance of two hundred miles. Henry M. Stanley is the principal figure in the association. It is called the International African Association, and came into existence a few years ago chiefly through the influence of Leopold II, King of Belgium. Gen. Henry S. Sanford ex-minister to Belgium is now before the conference with a plan for a railway from Vivi to Stanley Pools. Prince Bismark is much interested in the scheme for developing the country. Colonel Williams, one of our most widely known colored men has devoted much time to the study of the subject and expresses great hopes for the future of the country.

Parish.

PARISH, December 5, 1884.

We have had a very sudden death in this town. Mrs. J. E. Sampson appeared well as usual last Tuesday morning. Her husband went to a neighbors to assist in butchering, that morning. On returning home about 2 o'clock p. m. and entering the house he discovered his wife dead on a bedroom floor. Dr. Todd was soon summoned and no marks of violence was discovered, an apparent [illegible] to her death. She had part [illegible]

[illegible] Hill, a ship carpenter, who was at work on a vessel at Buffalo Sunday, was lifted bodily by the wind and blown into one of the hatchways. He fell about 18 feet and sustained dangerous internal injuries.

The Jewett stove works of Buffalo shut down Thursday morning, throwing about 800 men out of employment. Mr. Jewett says that they have shut down as usual to take stock and get ready for the new year.

Thursday morning a fire broke out in the hollow ware shop of the Elmira reformatory, destroying the supply room, the pattern shop, the foundry and office. The loss of Contractor Daniel M. Thompson of Elmira is $15,000. The state's loss is $500. Both losses are covered by insurance. The burned buildings are detached from the main structure and the fire in no way endangered the reformatory or the inmates.

It is is estimated that over five million pounds of dried apples have been purchased by dealers in the towns of Lyons and Sodus, Wayne county, this season. This is the largest amount known in the vicinity in twelve years. Nearly two million pounds have already been shipped to eastern markets the price being 2½ cents per pound.

Albany and vicinity is the second large cabbage market in the world, Long Island ranking first. During the last season 3,000,000 cabbages have been shipped from Albany, 1,000,000 being sent off by a single man. Nearly all the islands between Coeymans and Troy are devoted to the production of this vegetable. The crop this year has been the largest ever known.

The managers of the Albany and Rensselaer Iron and Steel works in Troy, contemplate enlarging the corporation and building blast furnaces on the island opposite the works, producing pig iron for use in their works. The projected expenditure is about $600,000. The recent visit of New York capitalists to the works was with the intention of enlisting New York capital in the project. Erastus Corning will retain a large interest.

One tine struck the girl back of the neck, piercing the spinal chord and causing death instantly. Coroner Caldwell of Pulaski held an inquest.

Deputy Superintendent Seeley and Watchman Evans of the Onondaga Penitentiary Thursday morning arrested Jesse Peacock, the horse thief, who escaped from the penitentiary on Thanksgiving night. Peacock was at work as hostler in the American Hotel barn at Oswego, under the name of J. R. Powers. He came here on Saturday last, having walked from Syracuse. He and Wilson, who made his escape at the same time, traveled together as far as South Granby, where they separated.

South Scriba.

SOUTH SCRIBA, Dec. 6, 1884.—Lafe Davis a respected young man of this place, died at the Hamilton house, Oswego, Tuesday, Dec. 2, after a short illness of strangulated hernia, aged 31 years. Friday, Nov. 28, Mr. Davis took his wife and sister to the depot at Oswego, from where they were going to New York on a visit, before going he lifted a heavy trunk and barrel into the wagon, and in so doing he ruptured himself, but not stopping for that he went to the city, lifted out the trunk and barrel, when he was taken in such violent pain that he went to [illegible] drug store where he fell prostrate on the floor in terrible agony. Physicians were called and he was taken to the Hamilton house where he died [illegible]

[illegible] nally, and upon Mr. Roe adding that he believed the article originated with the Louisville Post, he was again flatly contradicted. Mr. Roe then said, "If you know more about it than I do what did you come here for?" and intimated that immediate retirement of his visitors was in order. Breckenridge then lifted his cane and Mr. Roe arose in his place to ward off the threatened blow. Meanwhile several attaches of the office, have been attracted by the loud talk appeared on the scene, whereupon the gentleman from Kentucky did strike the threatened blow, and drawing a revolver from his over coat pocket, backed with his friend down stairs, threatening to shoot Mr. Roe if he followed. The latter followed, hoping to find the private watchman of the place at the foot of the stairs and to give the beligerent gentleman into custody. Breckenridge, however, did not shoot, but succeeded in retiring with great rapidity and without being arrested. The matter was given into the charge of the police, who have not yet found their man."

Mr. Roe, who thus pluckily followed the Kentuckian, is the son of the Rev. Andrew Roe, of Fulton.

Repairs to the Oswego Canal.

A Fulton correspondent to the Syracuse Standard says: With the closing of the canals brings the work of repairs for another season. Superintendent Richardson has kept the Oswego canal in good running order, although it was considerably run down when it came into his hands. At present there is considerable to do to place it in a safe condition for next season's navigation, and while it is a fact that the abolition of tolls has not benefited the boatmen, it has created a debt for the taxpayer to meet. The work now to be done on this division includes a new bottom and mitre sills at Morseman's lock. The coffer dams are now under way, and steam pumps are already on the ground to keep all water out for two weeks. New lock gates will be put in at Nos. 7, 8, 11 and 17. Five new canal bridges are to be built, two of them at Phoenix. A new draw bridge will be constructed at Oak Orchard. This will be done this winter and early in the spring.

E. P. Roe is too well known to need comment as is also the Redpath Concert Co. We have never heard Sau-ah-brah, but friends that have heard him cannot say enough in praise of his lecture, so that we feel justified in recommending him to the public. We advise all our readers to support the course. It is putting $1.35 to good use—such things are of public benefit.

The Brown Stone Quarry at Fulton.

The Oswego Valley brown stone quarry was rented on Friday last for fifteen years to William Crabtree and James Faulkner, of Syracuse. This seemingly inexhaustible ledge of stone lies one mile from the river, along the east side of the D. L. & W. railroad, on the farm of O. J. Jennings. The stone is dark brown, entirely free from imperfections, and lies in strata from one to four feet thick. It makes beautiful fronts, being susceptible of a smooth finish, and will take on a high polish. Work will at once begin, preparatory to large shipments for the spring trade, to both eastern and western cities. The most experienced dealers in New York pronounce this stone equal to any that has entered that market. This work will give employment to a large number of persons.—Standard's Fulton correspondent.

Williams—Schryver—In this city Dec. 24, by Rev. J. Elmendorf, D. D., Gerome Williams, esq., to Jennie L., daugter of the late Jacob C. Schryver, all of Poughkeepsie.

We clip the above from the Poughkeepsie News-Press, as it will no doubt be of interest to the friends here of Miss Schryver, who was born and brought up in this village. Mr. Williams is a wealthy gentleman and has for a period of years held the important office of Judge of Dutchess county.

He has had considerable experience in this line of business and knows just what the young men want. Mr. Miller went to New York yesterday morning to select his stock. The store will be in running order in the course of a week.

Mrs. Grundy's Thoughts for People to Think About.

Politeness has no creed—but it has many practical illustrations at Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

Silence is the virtue of the feeble—at least that was said to be a virtue of a recent presidential candidate; and it certainly is not one of Kent & Miller's. Their ready made clothing speaks loudly for them.

Silence is the sanctuary of prudence—but the prudent man forseeth the evil and flees from it; that is to say he gives unreliable clothing shops the go-by and purchases his Christmas clothing at Kent & Miller's.

They that govern must make least noise—but they that would succeed in business must tell their claims abroad. Kent & Miller's patrons have learned that they make up no shoddy; that the cutting, stitching and finishing are equally excellent on all classes of goods; and that those who want a more expensive outfit can obtain it ready-made or to order.

[illegible] Nash, a youth of [illegible] was arrested yesterday by [illegible] Shepard, for breaking into Cornelius Vrooy's saloon, at the corner of Clinton and Jefferson streets, between 1 and 2 a. m., and stealing therefrom 800 cigars, a revolver and a bottle of wine. Nash tells a story, which, if true, illustrates a rapid slide down the broad road which leads to destruction. He says that his father died in Fulton two years ago, leaving him $800 in money and a house and lot, which he sold for $500. He went to New York and spent his substance in riotous living. He says he was a bar-tender in Harry Hill's saloon for one year. He came to Syracuse recently and stayed at the Armory hotel. He frequented the society of the fastest young woman he could find. After his arrest he asked officer Morgan for writing paper and an envelope. He indicted a letter to his sweetheart, a girl in Libbie Stokey's bagnio. He was held to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of burglary and larceny.

LATER—It turns out that the above mentioned young man is none other than George F. Jones of Scriba, who left home a week ago, taking with him $95 an overcoat and a silver watch belonging to his father. Mr. Jones went to Syracuse yesterday to see his son who is under arrest in that city.

Obituary.

Sweetly passed from the cares and the labors of life to that beyond, on Sunday morning, Nov. 2nd, at the residence of her son in Waverly, Mrs. Kate Johnson, the beloved wife of Isaac Johnson, aged nearly 74 years. Fifteen years since this noble woman embraced religion under the preaching of Rev. Mr. Southwick in Fulton, N. Y., and joined the Free Methodist church. Not many years after, being convinced of the existence of remains of carnality in the heart, she sought for and obtained heart purity, or in other words, the blessing of sanctification. From this time her life told to all a completeness of christian character that even the skeptic could not doubt. The fact that she had been with Jesus and had learned of him such a rare sweetness of spirit, such a readiness for every kind of christian work in the Master's vineyard, such a willingness to suffer for him, such a uniform kindness to all who enjoyed the pleasure of her society, that from her person and influence a radius around which centered a cluster of christian graces, affording all manner of ripe fruit, that even the worldling coveted her spirit. Such lives are too rare, and deaths are too seldom. The precise time of her death was unknown to her friends, for without a struggle or a groan, without sickness, to [illegible] gone, leaving on her [illegible] smile of the victor. [illegible]

Farmers, a Word To You:

We are in receipt of nearly all the important agricultural papers and magazines in the country. They are edited by able men and there is not a leading agricultural writer or thinker that is not connected with some of these periodicals. The agricultural department of this paper is in charge of a practical farmer. Now our editor believes that most of these leading agriculturists know much more about farming than he does, although he claims to know something of it, and that he will present to our readers the cream of the agricultural thought of this country and Europe. You will thus get in this paper the best carefully selected from the mass of farm papers. Our columns are always open for the discussion of farm topics by our own farmers. We shall be glad to hear from any of you.

The Times' Great 30 Day Offer

For the next 30 days only, we offer to any NEW SUBSCRIBER sending us $1.25 this paper from now to January 1st, 1886, and a leading work of fiction that retails at from 1.00 to $1.50.

A book worth more than the cost of the paper. We are enabled to do this from the fact that we succeeded in making a good purchase by buying for cash in large quantities. We make this remarkable offer because we want our paper to go into every home. This inducement we hold out to any new subscriber.

A RARE CHANCE.

To anyone sending us 30 new subscribers paid in advance, we will give a complete set of Dicken's Works—15 Vols.—worth $20. And in this offer each subscriber will be allowed the premium first mentioned. This offer holds good for 20 days only.

[illegible] of the seeds are [illegible] Congressmen for distribution, and one-third to the Department. Last year, [illegible] packages, in all, were distributed; of these 2,919,739 were sent out by Congressmen, and the rest by the Department. It will be seen that Congressmen got more than their share; for although each of them was entitled to 7,104 packages, those representing agricultural districts wanted more. They supplied a part of the deficiency by exchanging books and other requisites supplied gratis by the Government, with city members for their seeds which were of no use to the latter, and then the Agricultural Department, to keep in the good graces of the Legislature, gave them some of its apportionment for the gratification of their constituents. Every Congressman keeps a book containing all the names of all the men in his district, who, for any reason, are worth looking after. Some of these names he gets from directories; some from local politicians, and others from applications made to him direct by the parties. This volume is sent to the Seed Office, a new building connected with the Agricultural Department; there the clerks direct a variety of seeds to each name, and in the same mail goes an official postal card bearing the notice:

SIR:—At the request of Hon. ——, we send you a package of ——.

Very respectfully,
GEORGE B. LORING.

The blanks are appropriately filled with the name of the Senator or Representative and the kinds of seed forwarded. Last year there were over 80 different kinds, including 128 varieties of vegetables and 131 of flowers. Of the former 2,381893 packages were sent out, and 563,688 of the latter. Turnips came next, 425,859 packages having been distributed, together with 69,290 of wheat; 114,671 of tobacco; 112,229 of potatoes; 84,859 of soghum; and 565 of sunflowers. About 150 women and from 50 to 60 men are employed in putting up the seeds in a busy time. The former are paid $1.25, and the latter, $1.50 a day. The Department has a crop correspondent in each county throughout the entire country, and a central one in each State; the former got 394,905 packages, and the latter 72,450, while the miscellaneous applicants obtained 279,653. Peas, beans, grain and potatoes, are put up in quart sacks, and flower seeds in small envelopes. According to official announcement, "the object of this distribution is the promotion of the interests of agriculture, by introducing into various sections of the country such new and valuable products as may be adapted to the climate and soil of each." In spite of the adage that "one shouldn't look a gift horse in the mouth," many of those who receive the seeds for nothing, complain that may of them are not worth any more, being old or very common. The Department, however, claims that it does its level best to secure the best sorts. Some of them are bought in other countries, but the great bulk of them are purchased in the United States. All who want to participate in the distribution should pply to the Representatives of their respective districts, or the Senators for their respective states.

Kitchen Garden.

In a well-managed garden, as soon as one crop is off, the ground is made ready for another, if the season allows. In stiff soils, especially, ploughing or spading and leaving them rough through the winter greatly improves them.

Preserving Roots in Winter.—Parsnips, salsify, and horseradish are not injured by hard freezing; all others must be stored for the winter, and a sufficient supply of the hardy kinds should also be taken up. If the cellar is not too warm, a supply for present use may be kept in boxes or barrels, and covered with earth, to prevent shrivelling.

Cabbage.—The usual method is to pull the cabbages, set them in a dry place, heads downward, and on the approach of cold weather cover with a coating of leaves up to the ends of the roots; light soil [illegible] used instead of leaves. For family use, it is convenient to dig a trench [illegible] water will not stand, and set the cabbages, with what soil adheres to the [illegible] together, upright, in this, [illegible] covering with boards, [illegible] comes on, place a layer [illegible] straw over the heads. Soft [illegible] thus treated will very often [illegible]

[illegible] Rhubarb.—Though [illegible] hardy, the beds [illegible] and earlier if [illegible] of three or four in[illegible] should be [illegible] already done, [illegible]

[illegible] crop was [illegible] paying one. [illegible] is comparatively exempt from the ravages of insects, and for this reason may be sown very early in the season, and a good growth secured before cold weather sets in. From half a bushel to a bushel—on an average three pecks—is the proper quantity to sow to the acre. The amount of seed required is less, and the crop greater than in the case of wheat, so that the profit on the grain, in many cases is much higher per acre for rye than for wheat. The yield of straw per acre is from 20 to 50, and in some cases, is 150 per cent. greater than that of any other straw producing grain. The price per ton for the straw also averages from 25 to fifty per cent. higher, thus making it decided the most profitable crop for straw. Anyone can readily calculate which, in any particular case, will prove the most profitable crop. Of course, where wheat succeeds and straw is abundant and has no marketable price, rye will not be selected.

As a food for man, rye is not popular, though rye bread and rye mush are not despised, by many; they are certainly wholesome. As feed for horses rye is very desirable. From a pint to a quart two or three times a day, with other feed, will greatly improve the condition of a horse, rendering the coat bright and glossy, and will usually make the animal appear darker in color.

As a green manure, rye is not generally appreciated as it should be; while it is not equal to clover where clover will grow, it certainly will prove a success in many places where clover fails. It, to absorbs gases from the air, and in this way makes a positive addition to the fertility of the soil. But in many instances its mechanical action as a green manure, is most valuable. On heavy, clayey soils, the roots of the rye penetrate at least as deep as the plow, and greatly assist in communuting the soil. The stems and blades or green straw, have, within my experience, never soured the soil. It has been found "sweating" a week or ten days after it had been turned under, and that, too, in one of the driest seasons ever experience in Southern Pennsylvania. When turned under it has never been followed by the much dreaded "dying out," spoken of those who never use rye as fertilizer. It has not been turned under until in bloom.

No one would turn under a good stand of clover in the Spring to make room for rye to be used as green manure; but there are many fields destitute of any coat of grass, clover or any other herbage. Here rye can be used most profitably. It can be sown any time when the ground can be worked. Sown in August, it usually produces the greatest amount of straw and consequently will be worth most as a fertilizer. No ground should be allowed to remain unoccupied even for half a season; if no other crop is desired, put in rye to be plowed under as a green manure. For this purpose potato patches and cornfields need not be plowed; simply harrow the seed in; if it is only covered, it will grow. On hillsides it is very objectionable to plow the ground for rye, following corn or potatoes; the rye will not grow any better and the soil will be in fine condition to be carried away by autumn rains and the water from melting snows. More surface soil and manure are carried away in a single season of heavy rains than can be replaced by the average farmer in years. Light harrowing in, the seed soon grows, and the roots and blades unite in forming a sort of turf like mat strong enough to retain the soil in its place and at the same time hold the water and prevent washing; in this way, its mechanical action is very desirable, and, in the sandy soil or on hill-sides, this alone will more than repay the cost of seed and labor.

For soiling stock, rye is ahead of clover by several weeks, and this fact alone makes it very valuable. It fills a gap between an empty hay mow and a short grass field. Horses and cattle do well on it until it gets too old, and by that time the grasses or clover will take its place. When young it should be fed mixed with hay, straw, or corn fodder; if fed to freely alone, it will some-times produce diarrhea. For early spring soiling, it should be sown thickly on good land, about the first of August; sowing later on thiner, will lengthen the season several weeks. Rye, as green feed or grain should not be given to brood mares, to cows with calf, or to other animals in a like condition. While green, rye makes one of the best pastures for poultry, late in Autumn and early in Spring, the grain should be kept carefully from the fowls, particularly from the laying hens. Sheep thrive well on rye pasture.

It is scarcely worth while to try to convince the average American that roasted rye used instead of coffee would be conducive to good health, particularly of the nervous system.

SCROFULA

Usually develops in early life, and is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, thickening of the lips, enlarged neck, sore eyes. A scrofulous condition is often hereditary, but bad diet, too free use of fat meats, bad air, want of sunshine and nourishing food will induce it. Some people are troubled with scrofulous swelling of the glands, and with ulcers and kernels, which may cause very little pain; others may have inward scrofula, scrofula of the lungs, scrofula of the spleen, scrofula of the kidneys, and scrofula of the bones. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will drive away any case of scrofula and not to appear in another place, for their action on the blood and bowels will carry the disease entirely from the body.

How Watch Cases are Made.

A plate of SOLID GOLD 14 2-10 karats fine is soldered on each side of a plate of hard nickel composition metal, and the three are then passed between polished steel rollers. From this plate the various parts of the cases—backs, centers, bezels, etc.—are cut and shaped by dies and formers. The gold is thick enough to admit of all kinds of chasing, engraving, and engine turning. The composition metal gives it needed strength, stiffness and solidity, while the written guarantee of the manufacturers warranting each case to wear twenty years proves that it contains all the gold that can possibly be needed. This guarantee is given from actual results, as many of these cases have been worn perfectly smooth by years of use without wearing through the gold.

DUBUQUE, IA., Dec. 12, 1877.
I have used one of your James Boss' Gold Watch Cases for seventeen years. I bought it second-hand and know of its having been used before I got it, but do not know how much. It looks good for ten years longer. Did not suspect it was a filled case until so informed by a jeweler a short time since. I most cheerfully recommend your cases to be all they are represented to be, and more.

If the citizen who bought a barrel of cider on the market yesterday morning and told the farmer to unload it at a certain house on Adams avenue east and collect pay of the wife, is hopping mad we can enlighten him. The farmer found the house all right and was about to ring the bell to ask where the cider should be unloaded when along came a pedestrian, who asked:

"Is that cider?"

"Yes."

"Sold a barrel in there?"

"Yes."

"Know the man?"

"No, But I'm to get the money of his wife."

"Humph. Don't make any mistake. I don't like to see a farmer get himself into trouble."

"W-what do you mean! Won't she pay?"

"Oh, yes, but the man's an Alderman. He's the very chap who introduced the ordinance."

"What ordinance?"

"I haven't time to explain—in a great hurry—good-bye."

When the man had passed on the former stood for several moments in deep thought. Then he mounted his wagon and thought some more. He seemed half a mind to halt some one and make inquiries, but finally brought his hand down on his leg with a slap and chuckled:

"I've got it! I tumble! Alderman, eh! Ordinance, eh! It's a put up job to have me fined $10 for putting four gallons of water in the cider, and like a tarnel idiot I was putting my head right into the lion's mouth! WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO'S
IMPROVED BUTTER COLOR
A NEW DISCOVERY.

For several years we have furnished the Dairymen of America with an excellent artificial color for butter; so meritorious that it met with great success everywhere receiving the highest and only prizes at both International Dairy Fairs.

But by patient and scientific chemical research we have improved in several points, and now offer this new color as the best in the world.

It Will Not Color the Buttermilk. It Will Not Turn Rancid. It is the Strongest, Brightest and Cheapest Color Made,

And, while prepared in oil, is so compounded that it is impossible for it to become rancid.

BEWARE of all imitations, and of all other oil colors, for they are liable to become rancid and spoil the butter.

If you cannot get the "improved" write us to know where and how to get it without extra expense. [illegible]

[illegible] some[illegible] expression of [illegible] one sees in [illegible], the chin of so fine texture [illegible] up through [illegible] amusement; the large brown eyes were soft and dreamy, the [illegible] mouth was half-parted, and the [illegible] brown hair, looking black at night, was worn Greek fashion [illegible] and sweeping in undulating lines [illegible], the tiny rose-tipped ears. She was seated on a low sofa, carelessly clasping one knee with both hands. She wore a simple white frock, just mysteriously frilled round the little white column of a throat, and a great black-red rose nestled in her breast. One little high-arched foot, in peach-colored netting silk, kept swinging to the music. No one seemed to talk to her except the Doctor, who smiled pleasantly as he passed and said something to which she answered with a nod.

"Ophelia at last," said Grayton to himself; and in melancholy vein he wished he were Hamlet and could be at her feet and watch the play.

"Poor Ophelia! divided from herself and her own judgment!" (the quotation is irresponsible, "I wonder what sent her here—some brute of a man, or a soldier-lover killed at Kassassin. Grasious! I hope this terrible Meg Merrillies is not going to ask me to dance!" and he moved away, as he saw a wild-eyed woman bearing down upon him, to a seat somewhat nearer the pale girl with the black-ed nose.

For a time he watched her; then he tried to magnetize her. At last their eyes met; he stared her full in the face. She never shrank from his look, only a sort of pitying light seemed to glow in the sorrowful eyes. A moment passed, and then she rose quietly and with perfect self-posessessed grace walked over to him—to his intense astonishment sat down quietly by his side, and said in a soft musical voice:

"You seem sad to-night; I am sorry."

For a moment he was tongue-tied; then he recollected his instructions and pulled himself together.

"Well, I think I was sad because you were looking sad."

"Was I? I suppose I always do, then. Of course, being here naturally makes one feel sad. But we won't talk of that," she added quickly. "Do you care for dancing? I'll dance with you if you like."

"Dance with you?"

"O yes, if you like; many of the others dance, you know."

"How calmly she seems to recognize her sad state!" thought Grayton as he stood up and passed his arm round poor Ophelia's slender waist, wonder how she would "jig anc amble." They were playing the 'Dream Faces,' and as they swung in undulating rhythm to the pretty song he felt that few slips of sane seventeen could come up to her.

"That's right," said the Docto encouragingly; "set a good example."

"Means I'm to be a tonic, I suppose," thought Grayton; so he carried off Ophelia for an ice.

"You dance beautifully," she said, "No, you sit down and I will get you the ice; there now there is a spoon and a water; you feel comfortable don't you? Isn't that a beautiful valse?"

"Yes, I am fond of 'Dream-Faces the;' the people one meets in dreams are generally vastly nicer than the real folk. I have many dream friends."

"Have you?" she said, looking amused; "tell me of them."

"Well, you know I think I am married to a dream wife—just like Gilbert Princess Toto, you know, with her dream husband. And she comes to me sometimes and scolds me if I have done anything wrong in the day; and sometimes she is very loving and sometimes she is cross and doesn't come near me for weeks."

He felt as if he was telling a fairy tale to a child.

"How charming! Do tell me more of her. Is she beautiful? What is she like?"

The fanciful conceit seemed to amuse her, so he went on drawing pretty pictures of an ideal woman; then growing unconsciously eloquent, he burst out, "Ah, if one could only meet her alive, what a wife she would make! A very second self, [illegible] sympathizing, helping, [illegible] of charms and [illegible]

"Must you go so early?" she said; "why?"

"Well, you see, I am one of those much-abused people that the Radicals call Hereditary Legislators, and I'm not abolished yet; I must be in our house at eleven."

Of course she could not have understood a word he said, for she murmured to herself, "Poor fellow! so young, too!"

He rose and held his hand out. "Good night; thank you for a very charming evening."

"Good night," Ophelia tenderly.

"I should like a little memory of this meeting; will you give me that rose? I've been longing for it all the evening."

"Of course I will; why didn't you ask for it before!" and she took it from her dress and fastened it in his coat. "I shall see you again, there will be another dance here soon. How is it that I never saw you at one?"

"This is my first dance here," he said gravely.

Why it was that Ophelia's eyes suddenly filled with tears he couldn't understand, but she left him with a quiet bow and went back to the dancing-room.

"You've been enjoying yourself, I see," said the Doctor, as Grayton came to say good-by, "though I must say it was selfish of both of you."

"Selfish! why, I did all I could for her, poor dear girl!"

"Poor! why, my dear Lord Grayton, she has six thousand a year of her own!"

"Dear me! and what is done with it?"

"She does what she likes with it; she helps all the big charities, and she helps me and Copswood in particular, and she generally does a lot of good to our poor people—picks up someone she takes a fancy to, and cheers him up a bit. She's one of my best tonics, and this is the first time I have noticed that she never danced once with a patient: that was your fault, you know."

"Good gracious! then she—isn't—a—patient herself?"

I thought you knew her."

"Not I! She came over and spoke to me, and"—

"I see it all—took you for a patient O, this is too lovely!" and the Doctor was positively boisterous in his merriment.

Grayton bolted to the House, and having duly recorded his vote against the Bill, sent up from the Commons, for chloroforming grouse instead of shooting them, betook himself in a strange state of bewilderment to Lady Congleton's. His hostess welcomed him warmly, like the returned prodigal that he was, and insisted upon introducing him to some one in whom she seemed to have a special interest.

"Really a delightful girl, Lord Grayton, quite after your own heart—devoted to art and philanthropy, you know."

Grayton was too full of thought to protest, so submitted meekly. What were girls to him just then? He was thinking over Copswood as his hostess took his arm and they set out on a pilgrimage.

"Ah, here she is! Lady Mary Pettigrew, Lord Grayton. I'm sure you two will get along capitally;" and her ladyship was off, leaving Grayton staring vaguely at his fascinating lunatic.

Lady Mary could hardly suppress a scream as she turned her head and blushed as deep as the rose he still wore in his button-hole.

"How—how did you get out?" she asked awkwardly.

"I never was in, Lady Mary; the fact is, I'm afraid there has been a little mistake on both sides. I only found out from the Doctor as I left that you weren't a—"

She put her feathery fan up with a warning "Hush!" then said, "What brought you there?"

"Curiosity; and you?"

"I often go there and try to do some good. [illegible]"

"There was a little [illegible] as he looked at her with his frank, kindly eyes.

—[illegible]

My eyelids are wet as I stand at my loom and gaze into the [illegible] threads that make up my warp, as [illegible] my glancing shuttle goes to and fro and leaves its tiny thread of filling beside its fellow;—fit emblem of the little acts that make up human life and character. This thought was [illegible] my mind and heart at the thanksgiving at Ingalls Crossing at my daughter Jane's house. The whole household welcomed our coming and my grandchildren held up their little hands, as with gleeful voices they announced that "mamma has the turkey in the oven and the punkin pie is done and on the shelf." The very air surrounding the home and floating over the Sixteenth school house was loaded with the aroma of praise and thanksgiving. The horn of plenty had evidently been reversed over this neighborhood and the manna had covered the now desolate fields, and the barns and garners and the larders of the housewife were charged and heavy-laden with the products of the teeming earth, and their dumb(?) mouths plainly said "slay and eat!" With spotless linen was the table spread and Jane's white stone china, (bought at Tucker's) was tastefully arranged. The lifeless body of the proud and strutting turkey who had two successive autumns acted as high chancellor and roosted on the highest limb; was now on his back—in a brown study, while his lower limbs and head serenely reposed in the waste basket at the back door. * * * * The conflict was not long but sharp; for we too, now, like the bony bulk on the platter, earlier, were "too full for utterance." The next course was not solids or "solid." We had drank our chocolate, coffee or water as we selected, and all of our natural wants were bountifully supplied, and every "aching void" was filled. But custom and social habit has sought out strange inventions whereby this human body and its machinery is lubricated or blocked and nature's laws are ruthlessly violated.

Jane said to her husband, "John, will you and Josephine Andromanche go out and bring in the brown pitcher and my new amberina goblets?" The glasses were brought in and placed at each plate, and filled with cider of October's make and a lump of sugar dropped into the half filled tumblers of my grandchildren. Not a word for about five seconds was spoken. Said Ned, "Martha!" looking at me earnestly as the color came and went in my cheeks and lips, too plainly indicating the conflicting emotions in my breast, "What is the matter, are you sick?" Yes, I am sick—at my heart; when I see and realize the danger that is coiled, unseen, in each amber glass—that may create and fix the terrible habit that shall, in the coming days cover the poor victim with shame and wretchedness—the broad gateway that opens and step by step leads to the lower depths,—that shall bring many sorrows and grevious tears to the hearthstone and otherwise happy home. "Do you say that one drink, that a little cider can do all this?" "This at least is true, if the first swallow is not taken, there will be no occasional drinkers or drunkards, if it is taken there is a possibility of the vice of drinking being established, and then it is only a matter of time, when the votary of harmless(?) occasional tippling shall be lost to himself and to his friends, and he shall indeed learn that "at last it biteth like a serpent." Ned said, "Martha, why don't you stop cramming this temperance question you forget that you are not in your own house or in a 'hall,' and that you are only a mother to your girls, and a mother-in-law to John." "Now Ned, you are always chafing and checking me when I say anything about the danger that constantly attends those who indulge ever so moderately in the use of a beverage which has the elements of intoxication in it, although the poison that it contains is not great in quantity; the [illegible] the curse, is [illegible]

FASHION NOTES.

The low corsage is restored to favor for dinner and reception dresses.

High Coiffures of very simple design are worn on full dress occasions.

Fine embroidered nun's veilings trimmed with lace make pretty fall dresses.

The Bernhardt is the latest Parisian hat and is very similar to the postboy.

The novelty for trimming light satin evening dresses is the use of dark brown fur.

New Chamberry gauzes are striped with a color, or wrought with gilt and silver sprays.

A smooth bang with the end curled under on the forehead, not too low, is fashionably worn.

Embroidered tulle is the fabric for fall dresses and is used in the delicate tints of cream, rose, or blue.

Jeweled side combs and the larger back combs are worn by those who can not wear the very high coiffures.

Long cloaks of rich velvet or satin in light colors, elaborately embroidered, are worn as evening wraps.

A trained dress with bonnet to match is considered the most elegant toilette for the guests at church weddings.

The old-fashioned cameo bracelets are now made into dog collars for the throat by fastening the two together in front with a clasp.

The velvet dog collar, close and high around the throat, either of black or dark red, is in favor. It is fastened by a small jeweled pin.

[illegible] she has forgot it.

And one who later sought her?
Why, not at all. When, years ago,
I kissed her neath the mistletoe,
Amid the Christmas candles' glow,
She was my baby daughter.

"A WITLESS THING."

"A document in madness: thoughts and remembrances fitted."—Hamlet, act. iv. sc, 5.

"Now remember, Lord Grayton," said the Doctor solemnly, "all I told you. You are very welcome to come to our ball, though, as a rule, we only ask a certain set of wise men and maidens who know our way and their ways. Still, you are good-looking, humorous and cherry, and if you are sensible you you can enjoy yourself, and, maybe, do them a world of good. I believe in electricity as a curative agent—not the quack nonsense of belts and chains and musical boxes, that only shake the nerve centres, but the real electricity of animal spirits, the tonic of good health."

"I shall do exactly as I am bid," said Lord Grayton, a handsome, florid, muscular young man, strong as a horse, buoyant as a baloon, just back after a selfimposed exile of five years in India with the big game; but tell me of all those confounded cautions again. I did a lot of dancing of various kinds years ago, before I went after the tigers"—and he laughed as mingled memories of Mayfair and the Lotus Club swam before him—"and I've tried both the Corroborree and Salonga; but 'pon honor I never danced with a lunatic girl yet."

"Are you quite sure of that?" asked the Doctor grimly; "they are to be met with outside of Copswood I can tell you. However, listen; the rule is simple. Be civil and don't contradict. If old Crackton asks you to play chess, play. He's a good player and will beat you fairly if he can; if he can't he'll make a false move and call "checkmate" and you must resign. If poor Snobly thinks you are the Prince, and 'Sirs' you all over the place, and throws out hints about being asked to Sandringham; if you are asked to listen to the chiming clock in Baker's interiors, or to avoid some one else, because he is glass and might break, and you must do your best to be courteous to them all, and on no account laugh at their fancies."

"Sounds rather jumpy. And the ladies?"

I'll see to that, and will introduce you to the nicest, and tell you what to avoid speaking; about the men that will make the talking for themselves, the women don't talk much."

"Sigh of insanity, I suppose and what am I to talk about?"

"Everything save some one thing—the Empress of Austria, or the stage or white roses, or Mr. Mallock, or black stockings. I'll give you the cue—never fear; only it may happen that one of them will ask you to dance, and then you must steer as best you can—talk society or art or chance. My own girls and their friends get on famously with the male patients, and you must do your best. Come, you are going to be our best tonic to-night, and you must be off and dress; nine sharp, mind, as you all go to bed at midnight.

"Queer thing this," soliloquized Grayton as he completed an elaborate dressing, "beginning my first season after [illegible] years by dancing with a lot of lunatics. Hope they won't wear straw in their hair if they do I shall bolt to the Cogle[illegible] dance."

He had many strange adventures that evening as he strolled about the pretty ballroom at the Copswood private asylum. He was duly defeated at chess by the venerable Crackton, who deliberately slid back a captured queen on the board, and performed progigies of valor with her. He sympathied with the gentleman who had swallowed a crocodile, and he noticed the pale cadaverous man who amused himself by counting the lights on each side of the room and singing softly to himself: "Sorry I can't admit it, sorry I can't admit it!" He had been an Acrostic Editor, once upon a time. He noticed the fussy little man, with a pale-blue shaven face, who wanted to stage-manage the sixteen Lancers, and who piteously entreated the dancers to go back over all that again, please, and try to get it crisper;" and the erratic [illegible]alist who wrote paragraphs on [illegible] cuffs, and many other strange [illegible] that passed by in the motley pa[illegible] of unsettled reasons.

"[illegible] King Lear," whispered the [illegible], as "a very foolish fond old man, [illegible] and upwards," passed them [illegible] of "Brighton A" "you [illegible] he was!" and he whispered [illegible] Grayton's ear that made that [illegible] whistle softly.

[illegible] Ophelia, whose [illegible] should be so mortal [illegible]" asked Grayton [illegible] knew his Shakespeare [illegible]

over it all now but he remembered the fret of it all, and thought how near madness he had been triven when he heard of her ultimate fate, and where her life had drifted to. So there were Ophelias here! More like Audreys, he thought, as he watched some rather uncouth gambolling in a corner. His eyes wandered round the room, and rested at last on a face.

It was an exquisite, oval face, somewhat sad and wistful in expression, of that rare delicate olive color one sees in the South, the skin of so fine texture that the red flush springs up through the vein-tracery at a moment's excitment; the large brown eyes were soft and dreamy, the chiseled mouth was half-parted, and the dark-brown hair, looking black at night, was worn Greek fashion close to the head and sweeping in undulating lines past the tiny rose-tipped ears. She was seated on a low sofa, carelessly clasping one knee with both hands. She wore a simple white frock, just mysteriously frilled round the little white column of a throat, and a great black-red rose nestled in her breast. One little high-arched foot, in peach-colored netting silk, kept swinging to the music. No one seemed to talk to her except the Doctor, who smiled pleasantly as he passed and said something to which she answered with a nod.

"Ophelia at last," said Grayton to himself; and in melancholy vein he wished he were Hamlet and could be at her feet and watch the play.

"Poor Ophelia! divided from herself and her own judgment!" (the quotation is irresponsible, "I wonder what sent her here—some brute of a man, or a soldier-lover killed at Kassassin. Grasious! I hope this terrible Meg Merrillies is not going to ask me to dance!" and he moved away, as he saw a wild-eyed woman bearing down upon him, to a seat somewhat nearer the pále girl with the black-red rose.

For a time he watched her; then he tried to magnetize her. At last their eyes met; he stared her full in the face. She never shrank from his look, only a sort of pitying light seemed to glow in the sorrowful eyes. A moment passed, and then she rose quietly and with perfect self-possessessed grace walked over to him—to his intense astonishment sat down quietly by his side, and said in a soft musical voice:

"You seem sad to-night; I am sorry."

For a moment he was tongue-tied; then he recollected his instructions and pulled himself together.

"Well, I think I was sad because you were looking sad."

"Was I? I suppose I always do, then. Of course, being here naturally makes one feel sad. But we won't talk of that," she added quickly. "Do you care for dancing? I'll dance with you if you like."

"Dance with you?"

"O yes, if you like; many of the others dance, you know."

"How calmly she seems to recognize her sad state!" thought Grayton as he stood up and passed his arm round poor Ophelia's slender waist, wonder how she would "jig ane amble." They were playing the 'Dream Faces,' and as they swung in undulating rhythm to the pretty song he felt that few slips of sane seventeen could come up to her.

"That's right," said the Docto encouragingly; "set a good example,"

"Means I'm to be a tonic, I suppose," thought Grayton; so he carried off Ophelia for an ice.

"You dance beautifully," she said, "No, you sit down and I will get you the ice; there now there is a spoon and a water; you feel comfortable don't you? Isn't that a beautiful valse?"

"Yes, I am fond of 'Dream-Faces the;' the people one meets in dreams are generally vastly nicer than the real folk. I have many dream friends."

"Have you?" she said, looking amused; "tell me of them."

"Well, you know I think I am married to a dream wife—just like Gilbert Princess Toto, you know, with her dream husband. And she comes to me sometimes and scolds me if I have done anything wrong in the day; and sometimes she is very loving and sometimes she is cross and doesn't come near me for weeks."

He felt as if he was telling a fairy tale to a child.

"How charming! Do tell me more of her. Is she beautiful? What is she like?"

The fanciful conceit seemed to amuse her, so he went on drawing pretty pic of an ideal woman; then growing unconsciously eloquent, he burst out, "Ah, if one could only meet her alive, what a wife she would make! A very second self, aiding, sympathizing, helping, loving—at once the cheeriest of chums and the most idolized of idols."

She had flushed a little as he spoke, but she went on, what ap pretty picture! Where did you get your beutiful thoughts about marriage?"

"I suppose my dream girl taught me."

"Is she pretty?"

Grayton wondered if deliberate barefaced compliment would be a good tonic for a lunatic. "Yes, beautiful. She has large brown eyes, wonderful hair, a low voice, an olive oval face, she dances superbly, and she wears a black-red rose in her white dress."

Ophelia looked a little frightened.

"Forgive me, I didn't mean to be rude, but she, [illegible], you are not angry with me?" and he laid his hand gently on hers.

[illegible] there was a pause. [illegible] show you some pic[illegible] of an [illegible]

He was no bad jugde of a picture; but he preferred to affect ignorence, and asked the stupidest questions simply for the pleasure of hearing her talk. There was a kind of innocent dignity about her that fascinated him. She was more like a Vestal virgin than a Bachante. So the evening passed all too quickly, till he suddenly bethought himself that there was an important division in the Lords that night, and that he was bound to be a "not content" before the clock struck eleven, and after that he was due at Lady Congleton's dance.

"Must you go away?" she said; "why?"

"Well, you see, I'm one of those much-abused people that the Radicals call Hereditary Legislators, and I'm not abolished yet; I must be in our house at eleven."

Of course she could not have understood a word he said, for she murmured to herself, "Poor fellow! so young, too!"

He rose and held his hand out. "Good night; thank you for a very charming evening."

"Good night," Ophelia tenderly.

"I should like a little memory of this meeting: will you give me that rose? I've been longing for it all the evening."

"Of course I will; why didn't you ask for it before?" and she took it from her dress and fastened it in his coat. "I shall see you again, there will be another dance here soon. How is it that I never saw you at one?"

"This is my first dance here," he said gravely

Why it was that Ophelia's eyes suddenly filled with tears he couldn't understand, but she left him with a quiet bow and went back to the dancing-room.

"You've been enjoying yourself, I see, said the Doctor, as Grayton came to say good-by, "though I must say it was selfish of both of you."

"Selfish! why, I did all I could for her, poor dear girl!"

"Poor! why, my dear Lord Grayton, she has six thousand a year of her own!"

"Dear me! and what is done with it?"

"She does what she likes with it; she helps all the big charities, and she helps me and Copswood in particular, and she generally does a lot of good to our poor people—picks up someone she takes a fancy to, and cheers him up a bit. She's one of my best tonics, and this is the first time I have noticed that she never danced once with a patient: that was your fault, you know."

"Good gracious! then she—isn't—a—patient herself?"

I thought you knew her."

"Not I! She came over and spoke to me, and"—

"I see it all—took you for a patient O, this is too lovely!" and the Doctor was positively boisterous in his merriment.

Grayton bolted to the House, and having duly recorded his vote against the Bill, sent up from the Commons, for chloroforming grouse instead of shooting them, betook himself in a strange state of bewilderment to Lady Congleton's. His hostess welcomed him warmly, like the returned prodigal that he was, and insisted upon introducing him to some one in whom she seemed to have a special interest.

"Really a delightful girl,, Lord Grayton, quite after your own heart—devoted to art and philanthropy, you know."

Grayton was too full of thought to protest, so submitted meekly. What were girls to him just then? He was thinking over Copswood as his hostess took his arm and they set out on a pilgrimage.

"Ah, here she is! Lady Mary Pettigrew, Lord Grayton. I'm sure you two will get along capitally;" and her ladyship was off, leaving Grayton staring vaguely at his fascinating lunatic.

Lady Mary could hardly suppress a scream as she turned her head and blushed as deep as the rose he still wore in his button-hole.

"How—how did you get out?" she asked awkwardly.

"I never was in, Lady Mary; the fact is, I'm afraid there has been a little mistake on both sides. I only found out from the Doctor as I left that you weren't a—"

She put her feathery fan up with a warning "Hush!" then said, "What brought you there?"

"Curiosity; and you?"

"I often go there and try to do some good. I cheer them sometimes; but to-night! O, how wrong and stupid of me!"

There was a little pause as he looked at her with his frank, kindly eyes.

"Let us forget and forgive, Lady Mary; after all, you were very good to poor Hamlet."

"And you were very nice and kind to foolish Ophelia. Listen! there's the 'Dream Faces' again; let us see if we can dance it in our right minds," she said, as she rose with a nervous smile quivering in the corners of her lips.

And it so happened that in a month they both came to their right minds, and the Doctor was at the wedding.—[London World.

Thanksgiving Dinner—Autumn in the Old "Sixteenth"—A High Chancellor in a Brown Study—Cider in Amber Glasses—She Protests and Her Shuttle Still Clanking.

"God hath yoked to guilt
Her pale tormentor, misery. * * * *
* * * * * * * * * * *

"Fling wide the grain far those who throw
The clanking shuttle to and fro,
In the long row of humming rooms,
And into ponderous masses wind
The web that from a thousand looms,
Comes forth to clothe mankind."
—[Bryant.

My eyelids are wet as I stand at my loom and gaze into the innumerable threads that make up my warp, and as my clanking shuttle goes to and fro and leaves its tiny thread of filling beside its fellow;—fit emblem of the little acts that make up human life and character. This thought was stamped upon my mind and heart at the thanksgiving at Ingalls Crossing at my daughter Jane's house. The whole household welcomed our coming and my grandchildren held up their little hands, as with gleeful voices they announced that "mamma has the turkey in the oven and the punkin pie is done and on the shelf." The very air surrounding the home and floating over the Sixteenth school house was loaded with the aroma of praise and thanksgiving. The horn of plenty had evidently been reversed over this neighborhood and the manna had covered the now desolate fields, and the barns and garners and the larders of the housewife were charged and heavy-laden with the preducts of the teeming earth, and their dumb(?) mouths plainly said "slay and eat!" With spotless linen was the table spread and Jane's white stone china, (bought at Tucker's) was tastefully arranged. The lifeless body of the proud and strutting turkey who had two successive autumns acted as high chancellor and roosted on the highest limb; was now on his back—in a brown study, while his lower limbs and head serenely reposed in the waste basket at the back door. * * * * The conflict was not long but sharp; for we too, now, like the bony hulk on the platter, earlier, were "too full for utterance." The next course was not solids or "solid." We had drank our chocolate, coffee or water as we selected, and all of our natural wants were bountifully supplied, and every "aching void" was filled. But custom and social habit has sought out strange inventions whereby this human body and its machinery is lubricated or blocked and nature's laws are ruthlessly violated.

Jane said to her husband, "John, will you and Josephine Andromanche go out and bring in the brown pitcher and my new amberina goblets?" The glasses were brought in and placed at each plate, and filled with cider of October's make and a lump of sugar dropped into the half filled tumblers of my grandchildren. Not a word for about five seconds was spoken. Said Ned, "Martha!" looking at me earnestly as the color came and went in my cheeks and lips, too plainly indicating the conflicting emotions in my breast, "What is the matter, are you sick?" Yes, I am sick—at my heart; when I see and realize the danger that is coiled, unseen, in each amber glass—that may create and fix the terrible habit that shall, in the coming days cover the poor victim with shame and wretchedness—the broad gateway that opens and step by step leads to the lower depths,—that shall bring many sorrows and grevious tears to the hearthstone and otherwise happy home. "Do you say that one drink, that a little cider can do all this?" "This at least is true, if the first swallow is not taken, there will be no occasional drinkers or drunkards, if it is taken there is a possibility of the vice of drinking being established, and then it is only a matter of time, when the votary of harmless(?)occasional tippling shall be lost to himself and to his friends, and he shall indeed learn that "at last it biteth like a serpent." Ned said, "Martha, why don't you stop cramming this temperance question, you forget that you are not in your own house or in a 'hall,' and that you are only a mother to your girls, and a mother-in-law to John." "Now Ned, you are always chafing and checking me when I say anything about the danger that constantly attends those who indulge ever so moderately in the use of a beverage which has the elements of intoxication in it, although the poison that it contains is not great in quantity; the quality, the curse, is just as effectual there as in the grog at the veriest dram shop. "Can one take coals in their bosom and not be burned?" My bobbin is in the shuttle and I am not going to stop until it is empty—and then, perhaps only stop my loom to put in another.

The dinner was over and my glass remained untouched, as a mild and silent protest, as also were Ned's and Josephene Andromanche's incompliance with my earnest pleading.

At about six o'clock, John drove to the door with the platform spring carriage and we returned to our house at Upper Oswego Falls. The next morning I went to my loom with a heart full of thoughtful forebodings. MARTHA.

FASHION NOTES.

The low corsage is restored to favor for dinner and reception dresses.

High Coiffures of very simple design are worn on full dress occasions.

Fine embroidered nun's veilings trimmed with lace make pretty fall dresses.

The Bernhardt is the latest Parisian hat and is very similar to the postboy.

The novelty for trimming light satin evening dresses is the use of dark brown fur.

New Chamberry gauzes are striped with a color, or wrought with gilt and silver sprays.

A smooth bang with the end curled under on the forehead, not too low, is fashionably worn.

Embroidered tulle is the fabric for fall dresses and is used in the delicate tints of cream, rose, or blue.

Jeweled side combs and the larger back combs are worn by those who can not wear the very high coiffures.

Long cloaks of rich velvet or satin in light colors, elaborately embroidered, are worn as evening wraps.

A trained dress with bonnet to match is considered the most elegant toilette for the guests at church weddings.

The old-fashioned cameo bracelets are now made into dog collars for the throat by fastening the two together in front with a clasp.

DIVORCE.

It is appalling to think of the looseness of the divorce laws in many of the states. Philadelphia has gained the unenviable reputation of being the haven of divorce lovers. There are now pending on the records of the city over 700 cases of divorce. Chicago follows next with over 600. The laws of Pennsylvania allow divorces for adultery, abandonment, impotency, cruel and barbarous treatment that renders life a burden, and indignities to the persons such as spitting upon the person. There is no injunction, restraining the party against whom the divorce is obtained, from remarying, except in the case of adultery. The laxity and conflict of the divorce laws in our states offer a continuous reproach to their legislatures.

By this law of Pennsylvania if a pretty complainant shall come into court and with becoming modesty proclaim that "he spat upon my gaberdine" she would be entitled to a divorce under the rule of "a personal indignity." Likewise if the husband should remain too long at the club or should forcefully persuade the wife to start the heater on a January morning, or should refuse to search for burglars, or believe that Christmas came this year. In such cases she could obtain a divorce on the grounds of "cruel and barbarous treatment that renders life a burden." It costs about $35 to obtain a divorce. With such loose regulations the Mormons may well set up their system of Polygamy as one better than that of our states. According to their law a man may have many wives. According to the law of Pennsylvania he may have many wives, but only one at a time. Before he marries he must each time obtain a divorce from his wife living. This is expensive, It is more economical to adopt the mormon view.

RECIPROCITY.

The new treaty between Spain and the United States still continues to be agitated. Labor organizations in the tobacco trade are sending protests to Washington, while some of the tobacco manufacturers who were against the treaty are now in favor of it. We have not yet presented its many features to our readers for we do not wish to take sides on so important a question until we feel certain of being in the right. Its ratification or rejection by the senate will be of great importance to our country. President Arthur and Secretary Frelinghuysen favor the treaty.

WE see no reason as yet to change our statement of two weeks since that President Arthur seemed to be leading in the Senatorial contest. Meanwhile, a strong sentiment is growing in favor of Mr. Evarts, who is sustained by very many of the substantial element in the Republican party. But it is, the slate makers who put up the officers and so we believe it impossible that he will be chosen.

SOME curious facts have lately been revealed. In the Forty-eighth Congress "leave to print" was granted 76 times. It means that 76 speeches were printed in the Congressional Record that were never delivered in the House. It costs the government some money, but then we ought not to grumble. If a man has gone through the worry and labor and embarrassments and expense and gauntlet of a political canvass and has finally reached Washington to find that so many greater men are there that he can't even get a chance to speak. If he has gone through all this, it is no more than a christian duty of the government to allow him the privilege of insereing in the record an imaginary speech and sending printed copies to his constituents.

OVER 10,000 bills are now before both houses of Congress. It is hoped that during the remainder of the session good work will be done. There are many important bills that need attention. The Mormon question should be delayed no longer. Some of the important bills awaiting the action of the House are the Congressional Library Bill, one for the free delivery of letters; the bill to give effect to the treaty of reciprocity with Mexico; one to improve our postal and commercial relations with foreign countries and others. To be true to the name representative of the people each member should sacrifice personal interest and devote their time to the promotion of sound legislation. With the present business depression safe legislation is especially needful.

FOLLOWING out our purpose to represent and indicate the bearings of the times, we counsel wisdom in all our dealings. There is no fear of the hard times of '75 or any such depression. There are no such causes for the present closeness in the times. Our people are quick to see the cause of distress and business depression and as quick to set themselves to the remedying of it. The uneasiness consequent upon a change of administration has much to do with the trouble, but this will soon wear away unless we greatly mistake the judgment of the incoming congress. The winter will doubtless be attended with [illegible]

[illegible] The family expect to [illegible] their customs of last year, when, as now, they were in private life. Mrs. Blaine will have a day for receiving, and will return calls. Probably no man either in private or public life receives more invitations than Mr. Blaine. He proposes to give a few dinners himself during the winter and it has been said Mr. Arthur will be his guest before the season ends.

LAST week this paper was painted red. The color symbolizing the fact that we have opened fire and do not mean to cease until THE TIMES banner is planted by every fireside within reading distance. To sit in the sanctum santorum and Micawber like wait for something to turn up, is not the rule. Action is a good policy. There will be no attempt to distort English into funny expression and appearance. Whatever is to be said, will be said in a plain and concise manner. Life is too brief to deal much in fancy, and news consists not of words devoid of thought, but of interesting facts. Be prepared to receive such facts.

WE stand in a threefold relation, of readers, advertisers and editor. Whatever is of benefit to the paper is of mutual advantage to the three. First to the editor and proprietors, for they and the paper are one. Second to the advertisers, because they reach a larger or more interested public. Third to the readers, more the more life and progress and liberality of views in a paper, the more will its value of usefulness be enlarged, the sentiments and spirit of a paper grow and are reflected in its readers. Any advancement of a paper enables it to be supplied with better brains and material. Each step forward is a step forward for its readers and advertisers. Our interests are identical.

We painted it red to increase interest in the paper. To increase its circulation. If we are successfull in either we accomplished our aim.

Do you not readers look through these columns with more curiosity than before? That is just what we sought after. We printed 500 extra copies and have been unable to supply the demand. We are in a position to be of good or evil to the public, and certainly try to benefit the people. By increasing the interest in our paper and its circulation, we shall help you and help ourselves.

LAST Saturday a dastardly attempt was made to blow up London Bridge. No one was injured and no serious danger was done. Such attempts and such a style of proceedure are simply the result of that element which aims at the destruction of civilization. No good can ever result from such methods nor was it ever known to. A few dynamite fiends are causing much trouble under the banner of patriotism. It is no patriotism. A country is poorly served by such adherents. It is to be hoped that the perpetrators of every such act will be discovered and punished. The frequent occurrence of these dynamite explosions calls for stringent measures of protection.

Henry Mason, of North Constantia, went to the Nutting district in the town of Parish, the other day to be married. Just before the marriage took place, while in the pantry at Jacob Manwarren's, a little seven year-old boy took a revolver from the shelf and ignorant of its use, in some way discharged it and put a ball into Mr. Mason's arm, but the wound was dressed without medical aid and the wedding came off at the appointed time. At the last report the ball was still in his arm.

Fulton, Dec. 15, 1884.

[illegible] has made them less liberal with their [illegible] in contribution [illegible].

The Garfield memorial church, which was finished and dedicated last winter, occupies the site of the little church which the late president attended. There is still a debt of ten thousand dollars hanging over it. Its members consist mostly of department employes and their families. Before the presidential election they had arranged to borrow the money and lift this debt and bind themselves to pay it in regular installments out of their salaries. In their present state of uncertainty, they say they dare not obligate themselves to that extent. Besides the depositors of the bank from which they propose to borrow, are largely composed of government employes, who will likely want to draw their money after the fourth of March.

Since it has been understood that President-elect Cleveland will attend the New York Avenue Presbyterian church in this city, the demand for pews there has been much greater. The church is overflowing now, and when a representative of Governor Cleveland called the other day to see about securing a place for him, the pastor, Rev. W. A. Bartlett, proposed to give up his own pew in the middle aisle in order to accommodate the coming president. Relations of a cordial nature have long existed between the pastor of this church and Governor Cleveland, and for a few days before the inauguration ceremonies the family of the governor will be the guests of Dr. Bartlett at Hamilton place, his home in this city.

This church has been noted for the distinguished people who have attended it; and president Cleveland will be the third executive of the nation who has been a pew holder. "Old Hickory" Jackson was the first and Abraham Lincoln the second. Rev. Dr. Gurley, who was the pastor twenty years ago, was was with President Lincoln a few minutes after the assassination of that memorable Good Friday night.

New York Avenue Church is a large new edifice standing on the triangular plot of ground at the intersection of New York avenue and H street. From its conspicuous appearances at this exposed situation, it has been irreverently compared to a steam engine coming up the street. The seating capacity is about twelve hundred, and among the pew holders are Secretaries Frelinghuysen and Lincoln, Judges Bradley, Harlow and Strong; General Boynton, of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, General Drum, and many leading members of the Washington society.

Mrs. Hoyt, Governor Cleveland's sister, who it is said, will take charge of the president's household, is a zealous church woman, and also preferes the Presbyterian fold.

During his administration President Arthur has regularly attended St. John's Episcopal church, which is so near the White House. His predecessor, Mr. Hayes worshiped at the Foundry Methodist church, and General Grant held a pew for eight years at the Metropolitan Methodist church. Andy Johnson, who was not regular in church observances, was a member of the Disciples church, as was also President Garfield.

A Good Suggestion.

The Hannibal correspondent in writing to the Baldwinsville Gazette of last week in regard to the tobacco crop in that section, says: "We would suggest the propriety of establishing a tobacco warehouse at Fulton. The large and increasing quantity raised in the vicinity would seem to warrant the same, and the buyers and growers mutually benefitted. Will some one erect one."

F. C. Mosher, W. L. Lovejoy, R. Stowe and William Back, officers and members of No. 2 fire company, on Wednesday evening presented the widow of their late comrade, Edward Oliver, a handsomely framed fireman's ticket, neatly engrossed. Assistant Engineer Mosher made the presentation speech.

One of the marked features of the Oswego Falls C. L. S. C. of late has been the reading of the letters of Miss Linna Schenck. Her descriptive powers are most admirable, and the many objects of interest presented by her long journey on the Danube, are so well brought out, that they are highly appreciated by the Circle, particularly as they are able to trace some of her journey on the large map of Colonial Greece which is used by these students.

S. N. Dada has received a letter from the Soldiers and Sailors Home at Bath, N. Y., informing him that John Wenke died at the Home on the 9th inst, of pneumonia. What was intended as a secret has leaked out and lovers of fine art can now look upon the fine painted portrait of the genial yet venerable Norman Rowe, of New Haven, the father of Mrs. Dr. Lee in Fulton. The artist is her daughter, Mrs. John T. Sheriden, a student of Mr. Stiles, who is doing some very fine work in sketching, yet in this picture shows no less talent as a portrait artist. It is intended as a surprise for her grandfather's 90th birthday, occurring the day after New Year's next —[Standard's Fulton correspondent.

The C. L. S. C. of Oswego Falls were well represented Tuesday evening Dec. 9th, (Milton Day) at Mrs. H. Schenck's. Quotations from Milton were first in order. Miss O. Potatoes by Horse-Power.

Substitution of horse for hand tillage materially lessens cost of production, and enables the farmer to be more independent of hired help and of the competing agricultural world around him. In no branch of husbandry is this advantage more apparent than in potato culture. The half-acre to an acre and a half potato-patch of thirty or forty years ago, if tilled as well as we till the crop now, would cost as much work up to digging time as one now needs to spend on a ten to fifteen acre potato field, and I don't know but we might safely include the digging too; and every operation in doing it gives both the land and the crop more and better tillage than it used to get by hand work. The present most approved method is, if planting in drills, to use a potato-planter which will, all at one operation, open the ground to a given depth, deposit the seed at given intervals, cover it with the required soil, press it down properly on the seed, and guage off the next row; and two light hands and a horse will in this way plant five or six acres a day, doing the planting as well as hand work ever did it.

But if chick-rowing is required instead, then use either a one-horse or a two-horse machine marker, making from fifteen to fifty acres a day, and at any guage of width and depth required; then after cross-marking this the seed is dropped by hand just at the crossing of these check-rows, and the horse-hoe, or coverer, then covers the seed at the rate of six or eight acres a day, and commonly throwing so high a ridge of earth over it that it will bear being slightly dragged or brushed down before the potatoes come up through, and this operation makes the first fine working of these rows. The next working should occur just as the potatoes are fairly up, not more than an inch or an inch and a half high. Then, either with this horse-hoe or with winged-shovel plough, pass once over the field and throw a slight covering of fresh earth over these rows, potatoes, and all, to the amount of about two or two and a half inches. This, if well done, will be the most labor-saving operation that can be given the crop for the whole season, for it will be equal to the most perfect hilling up, and hoeing, too. The soil at this time can be freely thrown over the hills, for there are no tops in the way.

After a few days the tops will come up through this covering to find themselves, each plant, as nicely surrounded and earthed-up-to with fine soil as the best workmen could have done it with the hoe, and at the merest nominal cost compared with the old method. After giving the crop so good a start as this it will be an easy matter for the horse, with proper tools, to keep it in good clean tilth the rest of the season; and this season of tillage should extend way beyond the time the old-fashioned farmer used to say it would not do to work in the potatoes any more, for they "would rese every time working and be too many in the hill," etc. Now experience proves that the more and the better the field is worked the larger the tubers, and we care very much about having the last tilling done so late in the season that a fresh crop of weeds will not have the liberty to grow up at the last, so as to check the free working of machine in digging or of the hands in picking up, or of the horse-rake in gathering the tops, or of the drag in finally smothing the ground down again to have it in good and tidy condition ready for next season.—[Henry Lee.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

Wheat is highly recommended for feeding purposes.

Apple trees should not be planted on light sandy or gravelly soil.

Careful mulching will save wheat, trees, shrubs, vines and plants from the effects of winter drought and heavy freezing.

A quart of oatmeal in a pail of water will freshen a horse after hard driving and prepare his stomach for more solid food.

A new kind of mash for horses is coming into use, composed of two quarts of oats, one of bran, and half a pint of flax seed.

A patch of locusts on a barren, gravelly knowl will not only furnish a supply of posts, but will improve the pasturage wonderfully.

It is too late now to apply manure to apple trees to make fruit buds for next season; but wherever the germ of fruit is started liberal manuring now will materially benefit next year's fruit crop.

Unfavorable seasons may be largely counteracted by culture. Early planting though half drowned if cleaned and tilled in season can be be saved, and late crops if kept clean and well plowed can be secured without rain.

Analysis of Soils.

Farmers should beware of the man Pollard, who has been going about New England analyzing soils and prescribing for their treatment at 50 cents an acre, or of anybody whom they do not know, who would persuade them to have soils analyzed. If he should charge $20 for the job you might better listen to him, perhaps, than if he offers to do it for 50 cents or even $5, for he will then show that at least he has some just appreciation of the [illegible] of the work. But [illegible]

[illegible] business, and [illegible] in which women [illegible] engage—including clerking in stores—have [illegible] salaries are reduced [illegible] below the point at which it is convenient to keep soul and body together. But there is a new field attracting a few of this class—namely, the culture of small fruits. The work is not menial, and to the tired teacher or clerk there is fresh air in it, with health to the body and growth to the soul.

I have in mind a young lady, probably twenty-seven years old, who was wornout teaching, who three years ago began the culture of strawberries on a piece of ground inside the limets of a town not far from Kansas City. She had, at beginning, no knowledge of the buziness, but being energetic she sought information from horticultural papers and from a neighbor who had some experience, until now she has a strawberry patch that paid her this year about $400. I have in mind yet another, the wife of an enterprising strawberry grower, who presuaded her reluctant husband to let her have seven or eight rods of ground for her own strawberry bed. He even plowed the ground for her and gave her the plants.

Our heroine set all the plants out and and did nearly all the hoeing. To make sure of a good crop she carried the cleanings of the chicken-house out in a basket and scattered it over the bed. Were I to tell you how thick the strawberries lay on that seven rods you might not believe it, but I can truthfully say that the seven rods of ground cleared $40 at the low price of 12 and 10 cents per quart. Let wornout teachers and clerks take courage and go into the cultivation of small fruits and flowers, and thereby get rest for their weary minds, fatness on their poor bodies, and "the blessed priviledge of being independent," The toil of raising and gathering these fruits is heaven on earth compared with standing behind the counter and in the school-room, year in and year out.—[B. F. Smith, Douglass Co. Kanas.

The Foreign Apple Trade.

The apple crop in the valley of the Hudson turns out to be a fair average yield. Some choice fruit has been gathed. The bulk of the crop has been marketed at low rates, some fair fruit selling as low as one doller per barrel, from that to $2 and $2.50 for the highest, excepting extra Newton pippins, which sold for $3. Many of the growers have been sorting and packing apples for export to foreign ports, Liverpool being the leading point, and then London, Glasgow, Bristol, Edinburgh, Leeds, Paris and Havre. The Newton pippin is the variety which established the reputation of American apples in Europe. For some years no other kind was sent abroad, and great care was used in selecting the fruit, all imperfect specimens being rejected. Then inferior apples were shipped and we were in danger of losing our apple export trade. In the abundant year of 1880, however, we shipped one and one-half million barrels of ap-

in this yar camp," said "But ye see," quality and scarcity. Some of the choicest fruit is now carefully packed, each apple being wrapped in tissue paper. Newtons, Baldwins and Spys are now the leading sorts used. The cost of sending, including all charges, is about $1.50 per barrel. Many of the growers ignore commission men by shipping direct from their orchards. Columbia, Greene, Dutchess and Ulster are the leading river counties engaged in this trade. Some fruit has cleared as high as $6. The largest apple orchard in the world is owned by Robert McKinstry, and situated in Columbia county, near Hudson City. It contains about 25,000 trees.—[Kingston Letter in New York Tribune.

Laboratory Revelations.

From the chemical labratory of the Kansas Agricultural College, where the students have been "analyzing for practice," we get an interesting note or two about the true inwardness of certain advertised substances for which high prices are charged. "Rough on Rats," for instance, is nothing but white arsenic slightly colored and should sell at 15 cents a pound, "Dr. Wei De Meyer's" "specific" for catarrh is put up in small boxes of two compartments in which are powders "to be used alternately," but both contain the same ingredient—about half an ounce of common soda worth say one-fifth of a cent. The "Buckeye Golden Butter Cempound" is a crude mixture of common soda and alum, value, 10 cents a pound, and colored by a small quantity of an organic dye—the whole put up in half-ounce packages at $1 each. An article for preventing scales in boilers where hard water is used is "sodium hydrate and crude sodium carbonate, with a little sawdust or pulverized bark to give an air of mystery," and could be offered at 15 cents a pound and still afford a profit.

From these specimens it will generally be safe to judge most if not all of the numerous preparations put up with more or less ingenuity and artfully presented in various disguises, with attractive wrappings and perhaps fictitious testimonials, to a credulous public.—[N. Y. Tribune

I was captivated by the glowing accounts, current twenty years ago, of gooseberries trained to single stems—miniature trees in fact. The modus operandi was to prepare the cuttings by [illegible]

[illegible] soil might gradually support and supply springs, or otherwise retard injurious drouth. Many, however, argue, and very fairly, that drains, while they most beneficially aerate and sweeten the soil, also maintain its humidity by condensation of vapor from the air thus circulated. Stagnant water is most dangerous and undesirable company; worst for mankind in hot weater and for plants in cold weather when they rest most safely dry.

Certainly there are sermons to the careless farmer in that wagon thirty-two years old, and good with equal care for thirty-two years more; in that fanning mill fifty years old and about as good as ever; and the cradle and handrake that have done over twenty years of service. Let the farmer who needs the lesson think over, while he rests some winter evening, how much worry, vexation and actual expense he would incur in half a century through sheer neglect by finding tools lost, mislaid, or so rotten as to give way in the midst of work, stopping all till they can be found or replaced.

It is evident that every farmer must be his own chemist and determinator if he wishes to know what particular fertilizing elements will do his own farm and the different parts of it, and his various crops, the most good. And this he can do by simple observation of results of clean, distinct experiments which he should carefully make every year, always comparing not only with other manures, but with no manure. Each year will thus increase his stock of sure, practical, profitable knowledge.

LOW PRICES for BUTTER.

The New York Tribune in its market report, explained why some butter is sold for such low prices in speaking of butter it said: "Light colored goods are very hard to dispose of and several lots were thought well sold at 8 to 10 cents." If butter makers would get the top price, they should use the Improved Butter Color, made by Wells Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. It gives a pure dandelion color and never turns red, or raccid but tends to improve and perserve the buttet.

Look Out For Your Head!

No matter what parts it may finally affect, catarrh always starts in the head, and belongs to the head. There is no mystery about the origin of this direful disease. It begins in a neglected cold. One of the kind that is "sure to be better in a few days." Thousands of victims know how it is by sad experience. Ely's Cream Balm cures colds in the head and catarrh in all its stages. ONE BOTTLE INSTEAD OF A DOZEN

"And it took only one bottle to do it,' said a gentleman, speaking of Parker' Hair Balsam. I had a run of fever, and when I got well of that, my hair began to fall out so fast as to alarm me. I really didn't know what to do, until one day a friend said, "Try Parker's Hair Balsam, That was some months ago. What surprised me was the fact that one bottle was enough. I expected to use up a dozen." Clean, highly perfumed, not oily, not a dye. Restores original color,

How Watch Cases are Made.

It is a fact not generally known that the James Boss' Gold Watch Cases really contain more pure gold than many "solid" gold cases The demand for these watch cases has led to the manufacture of a very poor grade of solid gold watch cases—low in quality, and deficient in quantity. These cases are made from 4⅙ to 10 karats, and a 5 or 6 karat case is often sold for 12 or 14 karats. It is NOT economy to buy a watch case so poor in quality that it will soon lose its color, or one so soft that it will lose its shape and fail to shut tight, thus letting in dust and damaging the works, or one so thin that a slight blow will break the crystal, and perhaps the movement. It IS economy to buy a James Boss' Gold Watch Case, in which NONE of these things ever occur. This watch case is not an experiment—it has been made nearly thirty years.

HAZLETON, PA., Oct. 24, 1882.

I sold two James Boss' Gold Watch Cases thirty years ago, when they first came out, and they are in good condition yet. One of them is carried by a carpenter, Mr. L. W. Drake, of Hazleton, and only shows the wear in one or two places; the other by Mr. Bowman, of Cunningham, Pa.; and I can produce one or both of these cases at any time.

Good Rules for Winter.

The following rules, published in Farm and Fireside, are worth heeding by those who believe that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure:

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold. Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten.

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out in the cold.

Keep the back, especially between the shoulder-blades, well covered; also the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open.

Never go to bed with cold or damd feet. Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in active condition the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases.

After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment; it is dangerous to health, and even to life.

When hoarse, speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost or difficulties of the throat be produced.

Merely warm the back by a fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

When going from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one keep the mouth closed, so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lung.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise, and always avoid standing on ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.

Why suffer with malarial? Emory's Standard Cure Pills are infalliable, never fail to cure the most obstinate cases; purely vegetable, contain no quinine, mercury, or poisons of any kind; pleasant to take, sugar coated. All druggists—25 and 50 cents.

A Wonderful Career.

Joseph Pulitzer, Congressman elect from New York, and editor of the New York World, has had a remarkable career. Not many years ago he was a stevedore on the levees at St. Louis. Afterward he became a coachman for Captain James B. Eads, of Jettles fame. Then an accident gave him a chance to run for the legislature of Missouri and he was elected. He made something of a mark in this position and got a start. Afterward he secured an interest in a German paper at St. Louis, which thrived in his hands, and he took quite an important hand in local affairs. He and Carl Schurz were in the newspaper and the Greely movement together. He sold his German daily at a profit, then bought the Post Despatch for a song and it became worth half a million in five years. He sought a broader field of work in New York, got hold of the World, which was then a charity patient, and has made it a very valuable property. Now after having been about two years a resident of New York city he is elected to Congress from a district in which he does not live and never will reside.

CREAM AND COLD WEATHER.

What a luxury is a bath in summer. Surely but a greater luxury is a clear head in winter; just when everybody is sneezing and snuffling with a cold in the head. But when you are attacked use Ely's Cream Balm. It cures colds in the head, and what is better, it cures the worst cases of chronic catarrh and hay fever. Not a liquid, not a snuff, Pleasant to use. Quick relief. Radical cure.

And [illegible] my heart,
[illegible]
[illegible] dead hopes
That once, living, were mine.

They drew out of the grave,
I had thought all too deep,
Every dream I had hushed
To such calm, silent sleep;
They tore off the black pall,
And I saw each white face,
Where the pang that death gave
On each brow I could trace.
And I bent to the hands,
That were shaking with pain,
My own whitening face,
On which tears had left stain,
And I laid them away
In their casket once more—
The poor, fond, foolish records
Of glad days of yore!

I would fain fling them there,
Where the flame kindles bright;
But I so loved my past
I still weep o'er its blight!
In an hour I will stand
'Mong the smiling and gay;
But the letters I loved
Nevermore shall see day!
When this heart in my breast
Lies all cold and all still,
Lay above it those letters,
They'll warm not its chill.

The Beautiful Girls.

BY A. H. OSLER.

Oh, the girls, the beautiful girls!
With laughing eyes and teeth of pearls;
How they bewitch us by day and by night,
Causing our hearts to beat with delight:
Pleasing,
Teasing,
Charming creatures!
Bewitching smile brightening their features;
How they can deceive us, as oftimes they do,
With soft glowing words and eyes of bright blue!

How dearly we prized the beautiful girls,
Far above rubies, diamonds or pearls!
How delightful we feel whenever we meet
The pretty loved ones on the busy street,
Walking,
Talking,
Smiling so sweet,
Dressed in dresses made exquisitely neat;
But it beats the Old Harry what a price
We men have to pay for those dresses so nice.

The Passing of Leap Year.

Full knee-deep soon will lie the snow,
And winter winds will wail and sigh,
While waiting maidens mourn and cry,
As they behold the old year go.
"Leap year, you must not die!
You come to us so lovingly,
We looked on you approvingly—
Leap year, oh, please don't die!"

Once in a Lifetime.

Her cheeks are flushed, her eyes are wet,
She heaves a gentle sigh,
Her hair is mussed, she scarce knows yet,
What's best, to laugh or cry.
What makes her blush and tremble so
With mingled joy and fright?
The first time in his life her beau
Has kissed her sweet good night.

"CHRISTMAS IN COONEY CAMP."

BY EDWARD EVART HALE.

The citizens of Cooney Camp were considerably excited. I do not wish to be understood as implying that social life at Cooney Camp was usually very stagnant. It has always been known as the liveliest camp on the river, and nobly did its citizens strive to sustain its reputation. But there was something so strange about the present excitement that I feel it my duty to chronicle it.

Cooney's was simply a lumber camp in the wild north woods of Michigan. In a little clearing on the side of a hill a few rough log buildings were gathered. The public buildings were not known by any high sounding names. They were simply the "Men's Shanty," the "Cook's Shanty," and the "Foreman's Shanty." These, with barns and sheds, and a few small log houses for such lumbermen as could be induced to bring their families into the woods made up the whole of the settlement.

But if the architectural development of Cooney Camp was of an inferior quality, its society was, to use a camp phrase, "way up." The thirty lumbermen who made up its working force were, for the most part, as rough specimens of humanity as could well be found. They were proud of the fact that they could produce two fiddlers, five singers, and one gentleman who could produce numberless airs on a "mouth organ."

Heavy literary work was not, perhaps, much in their line, but if occasion required they could produce Frank, a college student, who had come into the woods in the hope of finding health and strength in the rough out door life.

But greater than all these attractions, the point wherein Cooney's stood far above other camps, was the fact that it possessed the society of "two wimmin and a kid." The foreman's wife kept house for her husband in the little log cabin nearest the wood, while on the other side of the clearing, opposite the men's shanty, lived "Cracknose" Smith with his wife and little girl.

He had been given his nickname from the singular appearance of his nose, which [illegible] had been broken and twisted [illegible] until it was unlike any [illegible].

[illegible] could easily have dispensed with the society of Cracknose, but [illegible] hard work to get [illegible] little girl. She was [illegible] in the world outside seemed to have fallen upon the camp.

The men came in from their work in the woods in great good humor. It is wonderful how, at such a time, the true nature of a man shines out, and how little, foolish, blundering acts betray a warm heart beneath a rough exterior. Each man, as he came into camp, brought, half foolishly, some little Christmas token. It was only a bunch of hemlock branches, or a bunch of red berries, or, perhaps, some fragrant cedar boughs; but, slight as they were, the little tokens showed their appreciation of the day.

In a more civilized community it would have been considered a very simple thing for a man to pick up a bit of green at Christmas, but with these rough fellows it was different. Here was red-haired Tom, who had killed a man in the next county, coming in with a bunch of winter berries. Here was Jake, who kicked an Indian out of doors but the week before, dragging in a great mass of hemlock, and even old Bill coming in with a great tree on his back, which he proceeded to decorate with old boots and shoes, to the great delight of the boys. Every one was good natured, and all were bent on having a good time.

Hugh, the first fiddler, put a new string in his violin, and having found its tone to be perfect, laid it carefully away in his bunk till after supper.

Mike and Fred appointed themselves a committee of arrangements, and announced that, as soon as supper was over, the floor would be cleared for a "two by four," that being the camp name for a square dance.

Supper was eaten in a great hurry, and back the men rushed to the shanty, and took their places on the floor to walk through the great "two by four."

Sing, ye muse, of a pine wood's dance! The men stand in place, with their outer clothing tossed aside, ready at the signal to throw themselves into the motion. Those who are to impersonate ladies are distinguished from the others by removing their hats. They stand as solemn as owls in the consciousness of their new dignity, and "gallivant left" and "ladies chain" with becoming modesty. The fiddler sits above them on an empty pork-barrel, with his fiddle clasped lovingly under his chin, ready to set the party in motion at the touch of his magic bow. The lantern hangs from a nail in the roof. The fire-light flashes over all, bringing out the rough walls and empty bunks in bold relief.

So the Cooney campers stood that Christmas eve, waiting for the signal, when the door opened, and in rushed old Jack—gruff, grizzled old Jack, the roughest, ugliest, and most profane man in camp.

"Shet up this yer old circus," he shouted, "an' hark what I tell ye."

The "set" broke up in a moment. Hugh dropped his fiddle and bow, and Mike, who was to "call off," stood silent, with his mouth wide open in the very act of ordering "s'lute pardners."

"Thar's a man in this yar camp," said Jack, "ez wants humpin'. It kinder come over me all ter onst, thet I'd go up ter Smith's, an' git his woman an' kid ter come down an' see the fun. But when I gut thar, blame ef he warn't layin' ez drunk ez a loon, with his woman a-yellin', an' thet little kid jest a-lookin' at him with them big eyes of hern. Now blame me ef it's right. Somethin' orter be did."

Jack's story was, I regret to say, true. Poor "Cracknose," being anxious to celebrate the day in a manner becoming his birth and education, had provided himself with a large bottle of whisky. He had partaken so frequently of his Christmas cheer, however, that he was already, as Jack expressed it, "drunk as a loon." A howl of indignation went up from the crowd as Jack finished. It may be that the indignation of some of the boys was not unmixed with envy at Smith's good fortune in securing the wherewithal to get "drunk as a loon." There were probably very few men in camp who, had they possessed the means, would not have speedily drunk themselves into Smith's condition. They had all enough manhood, however, to despise one who would get drunk before his woman and kid, and such a little kid. They certainly believed with Jack that Smith deserved a "humpin'" of the most advanced kind.

What should be done about it? Unconsciously the men resolved themselves into a committee of the whole to consider the matter. It was a serious question.

"I moves," said Barney, the logical man of camp, "I moves that we send up a 'kermithy.'"

"Kermithy be hanged," put in Jack; "the only kermithy yer want is a kermithy to go up thar an' thump the life out of Smith, an' I app'ints myself as cheerman of said 'kermithy.'" Then he added quickly, "Is they any remarks? Ef not, them ez stands by it say aye!"

There was a loud chorus of "aye!" Anything in the shape of a free-fight was to be encouraged by all possible means in Cooney camp.

Jack went on "Them ez is agin it say 'No,' an' I'll thump their heads for them." Not a word was said, and the motion was certainly carried. Jack's fist was too heavy to admit of much argument. Some of the voters could hardly see the practical good of "thumping the life" out of a man who was already dead drunk, but they were silent from prudential motives.

Jack "appointed" Tom and Bill as other members of the kermithy, and the three [illegible] started out. The rest of [illegible] the door of the shanty [illegible].

[illegible] from the window [illegible] presently his hard old hand stole up and took off the rough cap he wore. He stood without a covering in the cold night air. This was too much for the endurance of the waiting crowd. To be sure they had sent the "kermithy" to do their work; but if its members refused to serve, they must take the matter into their own hands. As one man, they ran as silently as possible through the snow and looked over Jack's shoulder. If any of them had any inclination to be noisy, the sight that met their eyes silenced them in a moment.

The same scene was being enacted, no doubt, in thousands of homes at that time, but nowhere under the same circumstances. The little "kid" was just going to bed, and was kneeling, as children do, before her mother to say her prayers. At the back of the room lay Cracknose in a drunken sleep. In front sat the mother, listening to the little girl, and correcting her when she forgot a word. The poor woman had been crying, and the great tears stood in her eyes, as she watched the small petitioner.

The little one went slowly through the old "Now I lay me down to sleep." and then began a prayer of her own, speaking in her baby voice so that the crowd outside could hear her: "Dod bess everybody, and peas let old Santa Caus put a dolly in my stockin'—dood night." There was nothing more. The woman caught the child in her arms and burst out crying, while the audience outside stole silently back to the shanty.

Not a word was spoken. Jack and his "kermithy" had forgotten their mission of thumping the life out of Smith, and there was not a man in camp who would call upon them to "rise and report progress."

The childish prayer had touched a chord in the hearts of the rough lumbermen that had been long forgotten. It gave them a new idea for their Christmas.

The dance was forgotten. Hugh silently laid his fiddle away, and the company stood waiting for Jack, the acknowledged leader, to speak.

"Who is this yer blame 'Santy' Claus?" said he at last with a scowl.

The boys tried to tell him. Most of them, perhaps, had seen a Christmas tree, and had watched the good old saint enter with his bells and great beard. But not one of them could explain. They were like great children.

At last, Ira, who, as the head of a large and constantly increasing family, was supposed to be posted on home matters, began:

"Wall, he's a man; an ole man, ye see—"

"Wall," put in Jack, "he wants ter bring thet blame doll-baby ter-night, or I'll lick the face offen him."

"But ye can't do it," argued Ira.

"Can't!" yelled Jack. "Who says I can't? How big is he? What will he weigh? I'll fight him ef he weighs a ton."

"But ye see," explained Ira, "he ain't no man at all; only a kinder—wall, a kinder thing ez comes around an' fills the kids' stockin's—only he don't fill 'em at all, ye see. Ye see the folks they puts the truck in themselves, an' then 'lows ter the kids thet this yer 'Santy' Claus must hev done it. The kids they kinder takes it all in, an'"—and Ira proceeded to tell all the simple story.

Old Jack listened attentively. "An' so this yer hull bizness is a derned 'give' on thet kid, is it? Blame me if it's white ter swap lies with sech a kid ez thet. Ye jest wait till I see inter this a bit"—and out he strode to Smith's cabin.

The crowd wonderingly followed him at a respectful distance, and while he went in, they gathered again outside.

Through the window they could see that the little girl had at last gone to bed. Her small, blue stocking, patched and worn, hung from a nail by the bed, all ready for Santa Claus and the doll.

Jack came out at last, and walked straight to the shanty, the crowd following him. Without a word he pulled on his coat and fur cap.

"The woman says she ain't gut no doll baby fer the kid, an' ez Santy Claus ain't nuthin', I'm jest gonter fill thet stockin' myself. Who'll walk ter Crstal with me an' git some truck fer it?"

Every man in camp shouted: "I will."

"I don't want but one uv ye—draw lots," said Jack.

Thirty little blocks of wood were quickly prepared, and on one of them was written the word "go." These were shaken in a cap, and it was agreed that the one drawing the marked block should accompany Jack.

As a compliment to his supposed literary ability Frank was appointed to hold the hat. The men crowded around him all anxious to get a chance to do something for the "kid."

One after another the blocks were taken out. They were all blanks. At last there were only two left and Bill and Frank to draw. Bill drew first and took out a blank. Frank was to go with Jack and act as Santa Claus. They pulled on their rough coats and hats and started at once.

Crystal was ten miles away by the road, but by going through the forest one mile each way could be saved. Jack determined to try the nearest way, and immediately started up the hill into the forest, leaving Frank to follow as best he could.

The men stood at the shanty door, and watched them till they passed under the trees.

It was a beautiful night. The stars were all out, and the moon shone through the trees, glancing on the frost-covered branches, till they sparkled like diamonds.

A gentle breeze blew softly through the forest. The thin-leaved [illegible] terious Æolian harps to swell the grand symphony of nature.

Jack strode on ahead like his namesake of old who wore the seven-leagued boots.

How he did walk! Logs, stumps, brush were as nothing to him. He plunged and pushed and dodged his way along, ever keeping straight ahead for Crystal. Frank could hardly keep him in sight.

Perhaps it was due to this fact, or that this was his first experience as Santa Claus, that Frank began to doubt the wisdom of the journey. He began to fear that they had come on a very ridiculous errand. Why should they walk twenty miles through the frozen snow simply to procure a "doll-baby" for that little girl? The idea was absurd! How much more comfortable they would be in camp by the fire!

Jack seemed to have been thinking in much the same way, for he waited on a log for Frank to overtake him. Then he began: "Wot blamed fools we be—ain't we? Here we be drivin' off here hell bent for 'lection, jest fer a kid. It beats all." Then he added apologetically, "Ye see some blamed fool hez ben swappin' lies with that kid, and she takes it all in! The lie's told, and hang me, ef I don't stand by it. She'll find out soon nuff thet this yer Santy Claus is a derned whelp, an' I'm in for makin' her think he's all straight ez long ez I kin."

After this oration Jack started again, while Frank struggled after him as best he could.

Rough old Jack! He had hardly been known to do a good deed before; what could have sent him on such a tramp? Of what was he thinking, as he struggled through the wood on that cheerless journey to Crystal? Perhaps the words of the little "kid" came to him even then, "Dod bess everybody." Perhaps the little voice had wakened in his tough old heart some memory that had lain slumbering for years.

At any rate in his rough way, he had spoken the right idea. What was the long, cold walk, after all, to the thought that by taking it they kept alive the little one's faith in the old story of Christmas, and staved off, for a while at least, the knowledge of the deceit and heartlessness of the world?

Presently Jack stopped again. "This yer blamed Santy Claus in this yer play comes down the chimbly, don't he?"

Frank stated that this was his favorite way of entrance.

"Wall, thar ain't no chimbly ter that shanty, nuthin' but a stove-pipe. I'll 'low thet I'll jab a hole through the ruff with my axe, so we can kerry out the hull blamed play."

On they pressed, mile after mile, till, at last, after climbing an unusually steep hill, they looked down upon a clearing, in which stood, perhaps, a half dozen small houses clustered around a saw mill. "Here we be," said Jack—"here's Crystal."

There was something weird and romantic in the sight as they looked down upon the little hamlet.

The village was built in a small clearing, which looked to the two representatives of Santa Claus on the hill as if some huge giant in his rage had pulled out a great handful of the forest. The snow lay deep on the ground, and great blackened stumps stood all about the clearing, like sentinels watching while the village slept. The moonbeams played over all, bringing out each ghostly corner and hole, while the tall smoke-stack of the saw-mill rose in the midst like a watch tower.

But Jack and Frank had no time for such romantic thoughts as these. They hurried down the one street of the village, until Jack stopped before a small log house, and began a vigorous kicking upon its door. On a shingle over this door Frank read in black, straggling letters, "Poste Offis"—"Goods to Traide."

Jack warmed his toes on the door, till above it a small window opened, and a man's head appeared.

"Open up, yer old brute," roared Jack. The head had evidently just pulled itself out of bed, and seemed to belong to a very profane man; for, in a loud, voice, it forcibly informed the citizens of Crystal that he hadn't gut no whisky ner "terbacky."

This announcement had but little effect on Jack. He shouted: "We want to get some Christmas truck, so open up yer door, or I'll kick it down," and he proceeded to bestow upon it a series of kicks that would soon have caved it in, had not the owner frofanely agreed to "open up."

In a short time he appeared at the door, and grumbling as he bade them enter.

Jack and Frank passed into the little store. But now, for the first time since the start, Jack hung back. He could walk or fight or swear for the "kid," but selecting presents for her stocking was more than he could do. He pushed Frank ahead, saying: "You know something about these things, jest pick out the truck, an' mind ye, I'll pay fer it."

The stock of goods at the "Crystal Emporium" was not very extensive. One could find plenty of flour or sugar or pork, but the purely holiday goods were almost gone.

After a careful search, however, Frank found a few nuts, an old Jew's-harp, a jumping-jack with only one leg which could possibly be induced to jump, a tin whistle with a most melancholy sound, and, as Jack would have it, a large orange. There was also a few ounces of cheap candy, which Frank took with many misgivings as to its effect on the stomach of the little stocking hanger. This was all.

Jack was determined to find a doll. [illegible] jumpin-jack so it could pass for a doll-baby."

This aroused Jack's ire at once. "Ye don't ring no jumping-jack with one leg off onter me. I tell ye I want a doll-baby with two sound legs and plenty of fixings."

Just at this point the merchant's wife came down stairs to try and settle the dispute. She was such a motherly-looking person that Frank took heart and told her the whole story of the little girl's prayer, and her want of a dolly.

The woman was probably a very practical person. She could hardly have been otherwise, living as she did in such a place. But in every woman's heart there lies a spot that the smallest, weakest little child can touch to life.

The thought for a moment, then pulled back an old blanket which hung at one end of the room, and pointed to a rough bed in which lay two children asleep. Over their heads hung to little stockings, crowded full of trinkets for them to see in the morning.

Jack stood and looked in wonder. All he could say was that "Santy Claus done it."

The good woman took a small package from one of the stockings and handed it to the astonished Jack, saying: "Here is a doll for you. It is the best we can do."

There may have been a tear in her eye as she thought of the little girl far away in the woods, but this fact did not prevent her genial husband from remarking, incidentally, that the doll was "wuth just about two shillin's."

Jack and Frank gathered their treasures and started back. They hurried up the steep hill into the forest, meaning to follow their track back to camp,

They had hardly gone a mile before Jack turned to Frank and said, "It's gonter cloud up—we must take fer the road an' follow it inter camp. Quickly turned to the right, and struck out through the woods for camp.

But not quite quick enough. Great, black clouds came rushing over the sky, and one, by one, the stars were hid from sight. Under the trees the darkness was complete.

Jack and Frank wandered on, as best they could, apparently going deeper and deeper into the forest, and yet unable to correct their way.

Suddenly Jack fell fell over a log and lay with a groan. He was up soon, whoever. His hand was hurt somewhat and his leg caught under a limb. As he pulled his leg away from its fastening, Frank asked him how his hand felt. "Dern the hand," he growled; "wait till I see if that doll-baby is broke."

The toy was uninjured, and when this had been ascertained, on they started once more.

At last Jack stopped. "This thing hez guter be broke. We can live here well 'nuf till morning, but the pint is ter git back to fill thet stocking. Wait till I build a fire. P'raps the boys will see it"

Jack soon found a dry cedar, with which he quickly built a fire at the foot of a huge pine. The flames went roaring up into the air, and by their light the two Christmas commissioners saw the long-desired road but a few rods away. They had been travelling by the side of it in the wrong direction.

They had still eight miles to go, and tired as they were it was nearly three o'clock before they came in sight of camp.

They knew that the boys would be waiting for them at the shanty, but Jack had become suddly independent. "Say, what's the use fer the hull crowd ter go inter this thing? Why not I and you jest do this work, and hev it did?

Jack's word in such a case was surely law, and so the two men crept by the shanty to the little house, each one a very guilty Santa Claus, quite unlike his jovial, happy self.

There was no jingle of bells or pulling in of reindeer, but just two men in rough clothing, half ashamed of their errand, crept like convicts through the the cold. They pushed open the door of the rude cabin and entered as silently as possible. The lamp was turned low and the fire burned dimly.

Smith lay as before. His wife had, perhaps surmised Jack's errand, and tried to sit up for him, but, worn out by watching, she was sleeping by the chair by the table.

The little girl lay asleep with her pretty hair straggling down over the pillow. Frank filled the stove with wood, while Jack hastily thrust the few simple presents into the stocking. Though he did not know it, he looked like a venerable Santa Claus with his grizzled beard and rough, fur cap. The stocking was full, and yet Jack lingered. The orange could not be induced to enter the stocking, so he laid it on the pillow by the side of the little sleeper. Perhaps the child-face on the pillow was too much for him for, as if moved by a sudden impulse, he bent over and kissed the tiny rose-bud of a mouth.

The little one woke for a moment, and asked in her baby-voice, Is you Santy Caus?

No! be hanged ef I be, said Jack, and then, remembering where he was, he blushed as nearly as he could through his red face.

The two impersonators of Santa Claus stole silently from the cabin. As they went Jack growled in his old threatening way, "If ye tell the boys of thet, I'll lick you till you can't see."

Thus was the one stocking filled in Cooney Camp. Santa Claus did find his way over the rough [illegible] guided by a [illegible] in the cabin on the hill. What [illegible]

CLEVELAND'S CABINET.

Correspondence of Rochester Sunday Herald.

"Yes, the principal topic of conversation here at present is the probable action of the in-coming administration."

The speaker was Mr. William M. Ashley, of 506 Maine avenue, a man whose large and intimate acquaintance with prominent public men in Washington, renders his opinion of unusual weight.

"The all important question among the clerks of the various departments is who is to go. In my opinion there will be very few changes among the old-time employés who have been here year in and year out through several administrations. The removals will occur among the heads of the departments."

"The sense of distrust which must necessirly prevade the departments is, I suppose, detrimental to the transaction of business!"

"Well, rather I reckon. it unfits the clerks for business. Some get very blue, for they have purchased little homes which they must sacrifice."

"Last summer it was reported that many were suffering with malaria. How is it?"

"More likely, ill of a fear of change. I don't thing Washington is so very malarious. At the same time I admit that since residing here, I have not always felt first-rate. At times I have been troubled with sharp-shooting pains. One day my right arm and leg would torture me with pain, there would be great redness, heat and swelling of the parts, and perhaps the next day the left arm and leg would be similarly affected Then again it would locate in some particular part of my body and produce a tenderness which would well-nigh drive me frantic. There would be weeks at time that I would be afflicted with an intermitting kind of a pain that would come on every afternoon and leave me comparitively free from suffering during the balance of the twenty-four hours."

"Of course you consulted the doctors regarding the difficulty?"

"Consulted them? Well, I should say I did, Some told me I had neuralgia; others that I had inflammatory rheumatism, for which there was no cure."

"But didn't they try to relive your miseries?"

"Yes, they vomited and physiced me, blostered and bled me, plastered and oiled me, sweat, steamed, and everything but froze me without avail."

"But how did you finally recover?"

"I had a friend living in Michigan who had been afflicted in a similar way and had been cured. He wrote me regardinghis recovery and advised me to try the remedy which cured him. I procured a bottle and commenced its use, taking a tablespoonful after each meal and at bed time. I had used it about a week when I noticed a decrease of the soreness of the joints and a general feeling of relief. I persevered in its use and finally got so I could move around without limping, when I told my friends that it was warner's safe rheumatic cure that had put me on my feet."

"And do you regard your cure as permanent?"

"This was more than a year ago, and the trouble has not returned and I haven't been so well in years as I am now."

"Speaking of President-elect Cleveland, who, in your opinion will comprise his cabinet?"

"That is as difficult to determine as it is to say what office holders will go. Many good men have been named for the positions—Bayard, Thurman, Bragg, McClenllan, not to mention a lot of lesser lights. Every prominent politician has a slate made up which he is backing to win, but then, as is always the case some one will get left."

Burdette tells of an Akkansas literary society that recently discussed the question, "Resolved, That a circus is superior to a district school as a civilizing agent." The circus packed the convention from the start. Only one orator got up to speak for the district school. He was a teacher, and the president fined him twice and then made him sit down.

CHRISTMAS.

Once more the joyful time comes round when selfishness, hate, envy and vain ambition are laid aside and the nations heart rejoices in kindly sympathy. Liberality and mutual giving take their place. The tender chords of love and affection are strengthened and family ties and social bonds are drawn closer.

It is fitting for us as a christian people to celebrate the birth of a Savior of mankind. Our hearts are filled with joy and gratitude to the Son who gave his life that we might live.

It is a festal time. In our joys let us not forget why we should be glad for the Christmas time. During the whole year the hearts and lives of most of us have been shut up within the doors of our business and we devote our energies to the advancement of self. We have grown cold hearted and greedy. Now let us remember the unspeakable gift and open our hearts to the needs of others, spread joy where we may, comfort where we can. We depreciate the giving of mementoes through a sense of obligation but to give with the heart and desire to give is good.

WILLIAM EVERTS has come out with a letter to the public announcing his candiacy for the New York Senatorship.

YESTERDAY morning Harrigan & Hart's theater on Broadway, N. Y., burned. The insurance on the property ran out a few days before the fire. Messrs. Harrigan & Hart. Loss about $125,000.

LAST Thursday, at Brooklyn, N. Y., St. John's home, an asylum for children, was burned. Seven hundred and eighty-five children were turned out in the storm, a number of them perished in the flames.

MONDAY night at about 11 o'clock p. m. at New Haven Connecticut, an enormous tidal wave came rushing up the harbor with terrible violence, doing much damage. It is thought it was the the result of a convulsion of the earth's surface.

THE TIMES issues a little Christmas suppliment this week. We could at much less expense give you a holiday extra of eight pages consisting of miscellaneous reading matter; but our experience has been that the public cares little about such extras and they are seldom read. We concluded therefore to issue this tasty little memorial of our good will to the people of Oswego county. We have chosen to you a poem of Tenneyson's in such form that you will read it and we trust preserve it. It is one of the finest gems of thought that ever arose from a poet's mind. It contains lofty sentiments and we recommend it to you as a poem not only to be read but to be committed to memory.

LAST Friday an effort was made before the board of supervisors to raise the salary of the district attorney. The board has not yet reached a decision in the matter.

The salery of this office is pitiably small being only $1,100 for the district attorney and allowing $400 for clerk hire aggregating $1,500 for the office. Our great county puts a premium upon professional disability, for the office demands all of ones time and energy and there are few men who can afford to give up a practice of $3,000 or $4,000 a year for the sake of the honor of holding an office that only pays $1,100 a year and drives clients from the door.

The office of district attorney in this county is one of importance and the salary connected with it should be large enough to attract the best men in the profession. We should like to see the salary raised to $1,500 per year. The district attorney-elect stands high in his profession and his practice is worth much more than the salary of this office. We should deem it an act of wisdom on the part of the supervisors if they should raise his salary to a proper amount.

A special meeting of the Fulton Democratic club will be held on Friday evening next. A general attendance is specially desired as business of importance will come before the meeting.

GENERAL NEWS.

The cost of the Washington monument is reported to be $1,187,000.

Twenty-five thousand dollars worth of canned oysters and fruits were destroyed by fire in McGrath & Company's oyster packing house, Baltimore, on Saturday night.

A bridge at Newton, Lower Falls, on the Boston & Albany road was burned on Saturday night, as a result of a collision between two trains. Traffic will be impeded for several days.

The British steamer Oliveto was driven ashore at Hunter's point, L. I., Sunday, in a blinding snow and fog. She will be totally wrecked. The crew were rescued by the life saving corps.

There was a moderate attendance at the New Orleans Exposition Sunday. Divine service was held in Music Hall, followed by a sacred concert in the afternoon by the Mexican band. The weather was partly cloudy and warm.

Letters from St. Petersburg give facts of an attempt upon the life of the Czar on the occasion of the recent fete of the Chevaliers of St. George. The rails on the Gatschina line, over which the Czar's train passed, were found loosened at a certain point, and a soldier on guard there was found murdered.

A fire broke out during the services at Christ Protestant Episcopal church at Brooklyn, Sunday. The organist noticed smoke coming from below, and quickly left the loft followed by the choir. The pastor requested the congregation to depart quietly, stating that the church was on fire. The congregation left without confusion. The building was damaged $4,000 worth.

ALL BROKEN DOWN.

It is a sad and to see so many young [illegible]

[illegible] pending attention to Indian land leases; the question of considering the Spanish Treaty with open doors. In the House of Representatives, Inter-State Commerce has been the chief question of discussion, and the bill for a Department of Agriculture was passed.

Dakota went safely through the Senate on her way into the Union. There were only twenty-eight Democratic Senators to dispute her eligibility against thirty-four Republicans to say she was more than welcome. Senator Van Wyck long since placed himself on record in regard to Star Chamber work on Commercial Treaties, and his resolution to secure public consideration of them came up in the Senate the other day. That dignified body was too loyal to its tradions to agree to such an innovation at once and referred the matter to the committee on Foreign Affairs. A number of protests against the ratification of the treaty have been presented by Senators, Ingalls, Conger and Logan. Many of them are from labor organizations. and tobacco and cigar manufactories.

Senator Beck in his silver argument, said that silver had never had fai. treatment from any administration. He reflected upon Senator Sherman's political action while Secretary of the Treasury, and also upon the recent statement of the Controller of the Currency, that the Silver Coinage law was unworthy of this great nation. The Kentucky Senator thought such lecturing of Congres by a man who was once a department clerk was unwarrantable impudence. In reply, the Senator from Ohio defended Mr. Cannon, who it turned out had never been a Government clerk. I do not care retorted Senator Beck whether he was a clerk or as great a man as the Senator from Ohio, and that exhausts comparison. I deny the right of any subordinate official to speak thus of any act of Congress. Senator Beck opposed any change of the silver dollar in what he called the closing hours of a hostile administration, and Senator Sherman asserted that if Mr. Bayard became Secretary of the Treasury he would have to solve the silver question as the republicans would have had to solve it.

It looks as if the Inter-State Commerce bill might be defeated in the House after having advanced close to its passage by a strong majority. A colored Congressman from North Corolina, proposed an amendment requiring railroads to provide equal accommodations for persons bearing tickets of equal cost. This was met with bitter opposition from the Southern Members who look upon it as an attempt to enforce Negro equality in railroad travel. The bill has been encumbered with amendments and from various rulings by the Speaker, now hangs in a parlimentary tangle.

The House passed the bill for a department of agriculture, and the last days of Commissioner Loring's official life promises to be his happiest. His ambition has been to be elevated to the dignity of a Cabinet position.

> It is the rank he long has sought,
> And mourned, because he found it not

Congressman Brown of Indiana, says it must be conceded that this bill does two things. It changes the name of the Commissioner of Agriculture to that of Secretary of Agriculture, and increases his Salary.

The first act of the present session of Congress to become a law was that providing for the Washington monument dedicatory ceremonies. On Thursday it received the President's signature. The Congressional commission appointed for the purpose have agreed upon a program for the occassion. The Commission will invite all civil, millitary, and naval organizations in the United States to attend the ceremonies, which are to be held at the base of the Monument on the 21st of February 1885.

Applications still pour in for lodgings from organizations intending to participate in the inaugural ceremonies of President-elect Cleveland. The inauguration committee have also begun work having met and appointed sub-committees which will have the responsibility of carrying out the details of the inauguration. There are twenty of these committees which embrace the names of eight hundred well known citizens. The Finance committee includes men of wealth and good workers in canvassing for subscriptions. The reception committee is the largest, and on it are the names of Senators, Representatives, District officia l and prominent residents.

Money To Be Made.

It is said that dull times are not known by the agents of the great publishing house of George Stinson and & Co., of Portland, Maine. The reason of this exceptional success is found in the fact they always give the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present we understand their agents are doing wonderfully well on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co., undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being out over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co., guarantee grand success to all who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain all here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

[illegible] for the arrest of Alfred Wilkinson and J. Formon Wilkinson, the members of the firm. The service of the warrant, which was placed in the hands of the chief of Police, was waived by the guaranty of Attorney Marshall that the accused would appear in court this afternoon at 4 o'clock. That hour was fixed upon for a preliminary examination. This will probably be waived in order to allow the case to go before the Grand jury.

The complaint charges Alfred "Wilkinson and J. Formon Wilkinson with conspiring to steal $50.15 from him." He obtained a draft on the Chemical National bank of New York, it is alleged, on December 9, payable to the order of Herbert Johnson, his brother. The draft was not honored, and the complaint alleges that the defendants were "not entitled to draw on said Chemical bank of New York, but were then, as they well knew, hopelessly and utterly insolvents."

The insolvents in the schedule of liabilities filed on Saturday, showed that they were indebted to the Chemical National bank in New York for $2,808.16, when they sold the complainant the $50 draft.

The inventory and schedule of Wilkinson & Company, bankers, was filed in the county clerk's office Saturday afternoon. It shows preferred creditors to the amount of $98,696.80; unprefered creditors, $246,557.11. The amount due depositors of sums over $100, is $182,817.68. The total liabilities foot up $528.071.68; assets $324,304.28.—[Syracuse Standard.

General Sherman, was introduced at a meeting of a Grand Aamy Post in St. Louis the other day, objected to the use of his title in such a gathering, saying that in the company of carriage makers and druggists he did not mind being called general, but when with soldiers, he must insist on being a private and comrade.

Look Out For Your Head!

No matter what parts it may finally affect, catarrh always starts in the head, and belongs to the head. There is no mystery about the origin of this direful disease. It begins in a neglected cold. One of the kind that is "sure to be better in a few days." Thousands of victims know how it is by sad experience. Ely's Cream Balm cures colds in the head and catarrh in all its stages. Not a snuff nor a liquid. Applied with the finger to the nostrils.

Patrick Cullen, a blacksmith in the Erie shops of Elmira, met with a horrible death Thursday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock. He was going from the Erie shops to the depot directly opposite. A freight train was passing and going so slow that Cullen started to crawl under it, but was knocked down and five cars and a caboose passed over him, cutting him almost completely in two. Several people waiting for trains witnessed the scene and one lady fainted. Cullen was 46 years old and leaves a wife and eight children, all young, the smallest being but four days old.

Mr. Grundy's Christmas Card.

A prose poem!—At Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

Christmas cheer!—Fine warm overcoats and suits, from Kent & Miller's.

Christmas gifts!—None as acceptable, none so suitable for men, youths or boys, as garments from Kent & Miller's.

Christmas trees!—None complete that do not bear on its branches some overcoat or suit to gladden the heart of father or son.

Christmas cards!—The greatest card of the season is the stock of counter clothing fast melting away under the popular demand at Kent & Millers 18 and 20 South Salina Street. Superior in make, unsurpassed in quality, fit, style and trimminsg, and lower in price than the most sanguine connoisseur would dare estimate. It only remains to be said that the holiday trade is rapidly diminishing the opportunity for selection. Make your Christmas purchases to-day.

Clothing at Cost.

The entire stock of men's youth's and children's clothing will be sold at cost in order to reduce our stock. We are making a great specialty in men's and boys overcoats. We will sell them almost at your own price. Also, remember that we will give away $300 worth in ten different presents on January 1st. Any person buying $5.00 worth of our goods will stand a good chance of securing a valuable present. Don't forget the place, at Amdursky's first class clothing store, Fulton, N. Y. 5tf3

The people of Sandy Creek would do well to take the advice so repeatedly given there by their worthy paper, the News, in procuring a fire apparatus of some sort. Life's Work Ended.

Yesterday there was carried to his resting place one of the most sturdy upright and respected men of Oswego county. For 28 years John Wooden stood and grew among the business men of Fulton and earned a reputation that does not die with the body. As the president of our village, supervisor, churchman, business man or wherever placed, he was always the same honest earnest painstaking reliable man.

His integrity builded for him a successful business. By his death we lose a liberal, progressive citizen, a loving husband, a kind friend to humanity. It will be long before we can accustom ourselves to the thought that we shall not see his kindly face any more at the old stand.

The memory of such men does not soon die.

"Lives of such men
"Oft' remind us,
"We can make our lives sublime,
"And departing, leave behind us
"Foot prints on the sands of time"

Funeral services were held at the house of Mrs. Woodin yesterday at 11 a. m.

The former rector of Zion church Mr. Bishop of Jamestown N. Y., officiated.

Rufus K. Harris of the firm of R. K. Harris & Son, manufacturer of the Harris wagon, died very unexpectedly at his residence on the corner of Fourth and Buffalo streets on Sunday last at 1 p. m. The announcement of his death was received with surprise by this whole community. He enjoyed good health and was apparently quite well up to within one hour of his death when he was suddenly prostrated with a severe pain at the heart. Medical aid was summoned but he was beyond the help of human hands. His time had come. He was born in Northfield, Mass., and came to Oswego county 44 years ago last March, locating in Cleveland, where he resided until about 13 years ago when he came to Fulton with his family and purchased the Townsend estate. Soon after his arrival here he erected the brick shop where the business is now carried on. He was instrumental in building for himself a wide known reputation as wagon manufacturer. He was a careful business man and dealt squarely with all men. Deceased though a member of no religious organization was a frequent attendant at the M. E. church and gave liberally toward its support. His wife who survives him was Miss Marcey Turner of New Hampshire. He leaves two sons, H. A. and D. K. Harris, and one daughter, Mrs. M. R. Moss of St. Louis, Mich., who is now making a visit at her home at this place. The elder son H. A. Harris is unmarried and is a partner in the firm. His death takes from our village a prominent and active business man and the loss will be severely felt. The funeral will take place to-day at 2 p. m. at his late residence. Rev. Mr. Markham of the M. E. church will officiate assisted by Rev. Mr. Roe. The remains will be placed in the vault at Mt. Adnah until spring when they will be removed for interment in the family lot at Cleveland, N. Y.

After a long and painful illness, borne, with admirable patience, the soul of Mrs. Ann Murphy, widow of the late Cornelius Murphy, sr., passed on Thursday morning, at her residence on Seward street, into the hands of its maker. She was 54 years of age and leaves four children to whom she was ever a living example of a good, christian mother, to mourn her loss. Her funeral took place Saturday morning at ten o'clock at the church of the Immaculate Conception, where a requiem high Mass was celebrated for the repose of her soul.

Mr. Hubbard, for 60 years a resident of Fulton and vicinity last Wednesday departed this life. One by one, like the dropping of the leaves, the silvered locks of the generation that were the birth of Fulton, are leaving the trials of earth and entering the hereafter.

He was the father-in-law of Chas. David at whose house he died in the 86th year of his life. Funeral services were held last Saturday at 2 p. m. Rev. Warner Hubbard of Brooklyn a grand child of Mr. Hubbard was in attendance at the funeral.

Died, on the morning of Saturday, December 13, 1884, at the residence of his son-in-law Alexander M. Gow, in Fontaneville, Iowa, Mr. Wm. G. St. John, in the 85th year of his age. Mr. St. John was a resident of Fulton for 49 years and was well-known and respected by a large circle of acquaintances and friends.

On Thursday morning the infant child of Bert and Bessie died at the residence of its parents near the cemetery. The remains were burried at the 16th cemetery.

Died—in this village, yesterday, an infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Green.

The Glassford Combination now playing at Stephens Opera House is a first class company. It rarely happens that we get a better company here. The two plays they have thus far given us, the Two Orphans Monday night and Sam Slick last night were each presented in a very able manner. Everyone seemed to be good in his part we are sorry that so few were out to hear them. They give the "Hidden Hand" to-night.

We have noticed a good deal of speeding of horses lately down first street as far as the bridges crossing the canal. We have nothing to say against speeding horses at proper places, but there is danger in raceing horses through the crowded street from the Clark house to Bacon's store. Good drivers may feel that they run no risk, but some ladies or poor drivers are liable to be driving in the opposite direction in which case there would be much likelihood of a serious accident.

At the parlors of the Presbyterian church this afternoon at near 5 o'clock the children belonging to the infant classes will be given a supper and a good time generally will be enjoyed. It is expected that the church and society will on this Christmas eve celebrate for the first time in this church the joyous occasion.

[illegible] are crowded [illegible] their wonderful achievements, and pensions are granted to smooth their [illegible]; and, while they live, they are [illegible] upon by the greater part of humanity as the most brilliant lights in the grand circle of human society.

The statesman gives the best efforts of his life to guide the "Ship of State," and the thunder of his eloquence is heard in the legislative halls and chambers of Congress; generally for the good of the people, but not always; and the world remembers him, and affixes the title of "honorable" to his name.

The lawyer works all his life among the petty quarrels that disgrace our courts generally, often trying to raise a muss and pick up cases that should be promptly settled, thereby engendering ill-will and bitter contention, while he deliberately picks the unfortunate parties and amasses a fortune, and the people call it a noble occupation.

The doctor spends his days among the sick, alleviating pain and suffering, and he is honored as he justly should be.

The merchant deals in different commodities, and is generally useful to the other classes; but oftentimes he makes a heavy percentage from the consumer, and rises to wealth and affluence, while the poor laborer is getting poorer and the world overlooks its defects and calls it a high grade of occupation.

The clergyman discourses sermons in the pulpit, striving to turn sinners from the error of their ways, and to make humanity better, and mankind are not slow in appreciating the true merit of such a profession.

In every case, award honor where honor is due. But there is one occupation that lies at the foundation, and furnishes the very life-blood, as it were, to every other trade and profession on earth. Upon the agricultural element the world of humanity feeds and lives. Upon the farming products of the country the mines are wrought, the locomotives run, the cities built, the courts held, the workshops run, the legislative councils held, the churches and schools and societies instituted and organized, and the entire business of the nation carried on. And yet we often hear it said by our young men, and older ones too, that a professional business is a more elevated occupation. They tell us any "bushwhacker" can engage in farming, and that will do as a trade or occupation for the vulgar or lower classes, but it will never be looked up to as the more refined and high tones occupations are. May heaven help to sweep away such ignorance! Who furnishes the wool for the gaudy clothes the "tony" dandy loves to wear?—The farmer. Who furnishes the tobacco for the cigar the "dude" loves to smoke?—The farmer. Who furnishes the bread and the gilt-edged butter the upper-ten "swell" eats?—The farmer. Who furnishes the staff of life for the whole world?—The farmer. Who works in unison with God to furnish the indispensable material to keep the machinery of life in motion, and thus keep the soul and body together?—The farmer. Talk of a higher grade of occupation! There is not a more exalted grade of occupation that God's pure sunlight shines upon. To be sure, there are many slovenly farmers and men of low habits that work at the business of tilling the soil. Such men are no honor to this great branch of human industry; and, as a general thing, they are no honor to anything. The fact that such men are found engaged in the business should throw no stigma on the noble art of agriculture. Selfish greed and unholy ambition may seek to characterize it as a mental employment, fit only for slaves to work at, but they cannot fetter human thought; and, as the world advances, the great agricultural element moves onward at the head of human progress, and its grand central position as the soul and center and governing principle of the industrial arts and sciences is beginning to be seen and recognized in its true light by the thinking minds of Christendom.

Young friends, you who are about to go forth to choose an occupation for life, don't seek to find anything higher. If farming is not congenial to your tastes, seek something that is; for, of course, we are not all calculated for one particular business. There is room in this great world for every useful trade and profession, and it cannot get along without them. And when you have chosen the occupation you are sure God has adapted you for, go forward with all your energy, and strive to keep your profession bright before the world. But don't think because you can go about with white, untanned hands, and sport an ivory-headed walking-stick, and wear a stove-pipe hat, that these things elevate you. There is something higher and nobler than these. Sunburned faces, and hands and feet soiled by the dust of the plow, betoken honest industry; and these are the faces, and hands, and feet, that move the world. These are they who have their sturdy shoulders to the wheel of universal progress; and the society of the agricultural element is today as refined and elevated in heart and in deed as any class of people the world affords. These are they in whom our nation may well feel an honest pride, [illegible] they have [illegible] our country from a [illegible] [illegible] to be the foremost [illegible]

That is [illegible] objectional qualities of the [illegible] after the character of the rams of the head used. Cross-[illegible] are to be attempted without a determined purpose in view, and not then until all rams of other breeds are removed, and after the line of Breeding is decided on, no other [illegible] than of that breed should on any account be run with the flock.

Without a man has a large number of sheep only one continued crossing can be advantageously attempted. A few hundred low-grade sheep, say ordinary three or four pound shearers, can be up with any breed of sheep to an advantage. If a farmer has a few sheep, let him take one of the button breeds and stick to it through thick and thin, until he has a good flock of sheep, all alike and all good. He must breed with the object of producing something nearly approaching the rams used; must select his rams with a view to obtain animals as nearly alike as possible, and by liberal feeding during the winter months produce and develop from the particular breed used. The same applies to merinos for the farmer and raschman.

Let each man decide what he wants of the regular breeds; let him decide which is the most valuable to him; which is the best adapted to his own locality, and, after making his choice stick to it. Each year he will add something to his capital in increased value per head, and let him also remember that a few years work can be undone by by beginning again on some other line, in the second attempt to change the nature of the sheep.—[Texas Wool Grower.

Breeding Poultry.

When I get a hen or rooster that is the size and style I want, I breed from them. But I am constantly changing blood by exchanging eggs with my neighbors, and when I get something that suits, I cross with something else that suits; and keep up the right standard for shape, let the color be as it may, but still Pierpoint's white old hen with yellow legs is my sort. When I started in the poultry business, my customers wanted eggs and butter, consequently I cross with the Leghorn. Then they wanted butter, eggs and chickens too. Then I crossed with the Dorking, as they had a body of the right shape, round and plump, but they were covered with a white skin that did not suit them. Then I crossed with Buffs; they had a splendid body, but were too large; then I crossed them with the white Leghorn; then I had the ideal carcass, round, plump, medium size with yellow skin. All this has been done without a single thoroughbred fowl. When I have a hen with any colored skin except yellow, I never set any of her eggs, and never have a rooster only with yellow legs. My hens are healthy and all good layers, and they run where they please on two hundred acres. They are fed and educated so they do no mischief, and are docile and gentle. They are all killed off every year but a few older ones for mothers, and more raised to take their places. If I want a particular strain, as soon as the right hens have laid out their litter and want to set, I shut them in a good place with a right kind of rooster, and keep all there until I get eggs enough.—[L. F. Scott in Farming World.

Finer Stock.

Henry Ward Beecher in an address before an agricultural school said: "You need to have finer stock, and of all the noblest is the horse. New England has a reputation for good horses, but we can do a great deal better. When I go into a town I like to see good churches, fine monuments, solid public buildings, and then I look at the horses. If the draft horses are large and sleek—if the people live well and have good horses—God lives in that town. These things are an index, an internal evidence of that fact."

Test for Timber.

To test the soundness of a piece of timber, apply the ear to the middle of one of the ends, while another person strikes upon the opposite extremity. If the wood is sound and of good quality, the blow is very distinctly heard, however long the beam may be. If the beam is decayed the sound will be for the most part destroyed.

Harvest is over and a number of implements are out of use, and will not do duty until one year hence. These tools should be carefully cleaned, and stored in a dry place. The first leisure time paint the woodwork and repair broken or weak parts, and have them in trim for next year. Tools thus treated will wear much longer.

The discriminations made in favor of the Standard Oil monopoly, by the roads is too well known to need comment. Other oil companies have struggled for existence and others have not gained that. A decision was rendered against the Standard Oil Company which forbids this unjust discrimination. We append the following review of the case by Judge McKinney as it will be of interest to everyone. The Judge said:

"The demands of the plaintiffs as stated and the right to recover damage is based and stands upon two propositions: "First the plaintiff during the time covered by this controversy were required to and did pay the road $3,351 40 on the shipment of 58,862 barrels of oil more than the same time for a like shipment to the same points; second, that during this time the road refused to furnish cars to Schofield Shurmer & Teagle at their refinery, on which to load their oil, making it necessary for them to cart it to the road at an expense of $975,50, while the road was furnishing cars for the Standard Oil Company at their refinery. The two claims thus made in the plaintiff's petition constitute the only grounds upon which a recovery can be had, if it can be had at all.

"If the plaintiff's can recover at all upon the first claim made in their petition it is solely upon the ground that the road charged them higher rates than it did the Standard Oil Company, and the compensatory damages to which they claim they are entitled is the difference between the rate charged per barrel on shipments made by them and the rates charged the Standard Oil Company to the same points. Some of the questions involved in the case are of great importance in their bearings upon the rights and interests of railroads and the public.

"Whether railroads are considered as public highways or otherwise, it is manifest to me that the establishment of these great railways by legislative authority, with all their great priviledges, powers, and fanchises, and their construction is largely due to the fact of their right to take private property for that purpose, without the consent of the owner, makes them, in some measure at least public works, established for the benefit of the public. If they are not designed for public use it is difficult to understand why such great privileges are conferred on them. They are common carriers, made so by law, and the public have a right to their use and benefit as such on terms of equality without unfair discrimination, and this requirement or exaction on the part of the public does not, in my judgment, impair or in any manner infringe upon the equitable or legal rights of such carriers of freight and merchandise.

"What is equality may depend on many things. It is true, it is easy to see, that to discriminate between shippers at the mere caprice or whim of the carrier, everything being equal, is unjust unfair and wrong. A discrimination on the part of the Lake Shore Road in favor of the Standard Oil Company against Scofield, Shurmer & Teagle, on the ground that the Standard furnished the largest quantity of oil for shipment, and on that ground alone, everything else being equal, would be and is unwarranted, and if Scofield Shurman & Teagle, were required to pay and, in fact, did pay to the Lake Shore Road a greater rate for freight in carloads to the same points than did the Standard Oil Company, during the same period of time, the plaintiffs are entitle to recover the excess they thus paid with interest thereon from the date of payment."

Nearly half of the United States has been represented at Baltimore this year by two religious organizations. The Roman Catholic Plenary council which adjourned on the 7th inst., and the Methodist conference now in progress. We say nearly half of the United States, for 15,000,000 are Methodists and 9,000,000 are Roman Catholics. The gathering of such vast religious bodies is or ought to be attended with many beneficial results. Church conferences are in reality congresses for the moral government and spiritual guidance of large bodies of people. The Plenary council discussed many important questions and in its letter treated among others of the relation of the church to secret societies and of divorce. The Methodist conference celebrates the hundredth anniversary of Methodism. It has been a meeting fruitful in good works and far reaching benefits are expected to be derived from it. Religious movements have their beacon lights and John Wesley and the Baltimore conference stand out in brilliancy.

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits. 27t4

WATCH THE KIDNEYS.

They are the most important secretory organs. Into and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids of the body, containing poisonous matter taken out of the system. If the Kidneys do not act properly this matter is retained, the whole system becomes disordered and the following symptoms will follow: Headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, with disordered stomach and bowels. You can thoroughly protect the Kidneys by BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, and when any of these symptoms manifest themselves you can quickly rid yourself of them by this best of all medicines for the Kidneys. How Watch Cases are Made.

In 1875, thirteen men comprised the entire working force used in the manufacture of the James Boss' Gold Watch Case. Now over five hundred are employed, and the number is constantly increasing. The reason of this increase is this: In the James Boss' Gold Watch Case all the metal in sight and subject to wear is solid gold, while the remainder, which only lends strength to the case, is of stronger metal than gold, giving gold where gold is needed, and strong, elastic metal where strength and elasticity are needed, a combination producing a watch case better than solid gold and at ONE-HALF the cost.

Over 200,000 of these cases have been sold, and every jeweler in the country can testify to their quality and merit. TRADE MARK

LUDINGTON, MICH., Dec. 5, 1882.

E. W. Marsh, of the Democrat, bought a Jas. Boss' Gold Watch case 15 years ago, and carried it until a short time ago, when I purchased it, and sold it to a customer. The case showed no signs of wear, except that natural to any case, and I am satisfied can be safely guaranteed for at least ten years more. I have sold the James Boss' Gold Watch Case for many years, and the parties who bought the first ones are carrying them to-day, as well satisfied as though they had bought a solid gold case costing twice the money. I regard them as the only cases of this kind a jeweler should sell who desires to give his customers the worth of their money or values his reputation.

CURE FOR PILES.

Piles are frequently proceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose that he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching after getting warm, is a common attendant. BY EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

[illegible] Christmas [illegible] came dancing over [illegible] of the [illegible] many [illegible] inhabitants of Cooney Camp were stirring.

[illegible] cook had been up for an hour, [illegible] away in his shanty at the [illegible] breakfast. He had not much [illegible] with which to work, but, by [illegible] with his fried pork, [illegible] boiling the potatoes without their [jackets], he hoped to be able to win the [applause] of the crowd. He had also a [surprise] in the shape of several dried-apple pies, with which he thought to achieve a great triumph. But the rest of the Cooney Campers were for the most part still in their bunks. Sunday was always a day of rest. It was the great day for cardplaying and dancing, and when christmas came on the same day, they surely could not think of getting up as early as usual. So they lay in their bunks and waited till the horn blew, when they sprang to the floor and hastily prepared for breakfast.

Not a word was said about the events of the previous night. There seemed to be a tacit agreement that the subject should not be mentoned, yet it was after breakfast that there was a general desire to see how Smith was "gitting over his drunk."

In delegations of two and three the lumberman visited his cabin, and it is safe to say that on that Christmas he received more visitors than on any previous celebration of the holiday.

The visitors came back with wonderful stories of the liberality of Santa Claus. It seemed to be understood that they should [illegible] their knowledge of the [illegible] Crystal, and seek to carry out the [illegible] probable but more romantic theory of Santa Claus and his deer and bells.

"I'll be hanged," said Tom, thoughtfully, "ef this yer Santy Claus ain't done a big thing. Talk about yer play truck—I tell ye that kid hes gut some ez lays over the [illegible]. Leavin' out thet doll-baby there's [illegible] figger of a man with a string hangin' down betwixt his legs, an' when ye yank the string, the derned [illegible] the off leg won't kick [illegible] all."

The unexpected visit of the good old saint had started all the latent aesthetic[ism] which had thus far lain dormant in Cooney Camp. There was a general [overhauling] of old clothes, in the hope of finding a clean shirt or a paper collar. Several of the men even expressed a desire to shave; and at last, Barney, after carefully sharpening his knife on the grindstone, opened an impromtu barber's shop in one corner of the shanty.

Even old Jack caught the infection. He pulled out from somewhere in his bunk a soiled paper collar, which he proceeded to pin, with great gravity, to his flannel shirt, this, with a little sprig of pine in the button-hole of his vest, made the extras of his Christmas costume. He made a desperate effort to bring his mop of hair into some sort of shape, but gave it up after a violent struggle. After making all his preparations he lounged about the shanty evidently ill at ease. It may have been the paper collar or the fear of ridicule from the boys that troubled him. He evidently wished to go to Smith's, and yet could hardly summon up courage enough to start.

As a fighter Jack was supreme. In woodcraft or in all the social qualities [that] become lumberman, he had no superior; but at making Christmas calls or framing excuses for a visit, the smallest boy could beat him easily. He blundered about to find some pretence for going over to see what the little girl thought of Santa Claus.

The other boys had been anxious "to see how Smith was gittin' over his drunk," but Jack took a more probable reason for going. He 'lowed at last that he'd [illegible] drinked [illegible] the bottle [illegible] soon. It was a good sight better for a man ter [illegible] ez hed head enough to keep right side up.

Transparent as this excuse was, it was enough for the boys. They said nothing, and Jack fortifying himself with an immense piece of tobacco, strolled [illegible] over to Smith's house. He stopped long enough at the door to [illegible] a long stream of tobacco juice over the white snow, and then pushed it open and went in.

Quite a number of the boys were there already, and the little girl was [illegible] a [illegible] in the [illegible] her [illegible]

[illegible] with the doll [illegible] around the [illegible] in the corner.

It may be because Jack was the leader of the camp, [illegible] attention, or [illegible] live of Santa Claus. At any [illegible] gathered her treasures [illegible] and stood by his knee to show them.

If one of the men had dared to insinuate that in all Jack's nature there was the least touch of softness or gentleness, he would have been knocked down at once. The little face of the child, however, looking into his, saw something of the kind. She climbed [illegible] upon his knee, and spread out her presents for him to see.

Jack was in a most awkard position. It was strange that he did not make her get down. But there he sat, handling the doll and the jumping jack, and even attempting a tune on the Jew's-harp.

The little girl was loud in her praise of Santa Claus. She had seen him, too. She was awake, she said, while he was filling her stocking and had a good chance to see him. He looked, she thought, very much like Jack himself.

This was, perhaps, the greatest compliment that the little one could give, but it almost made Jack blush for shame to think he was so near being discovered.

He made haste to throw the "kid" off the track by describing an imaginary meeting with Santa Claus. The others listened with grave faces, nodding their heads encouragingly at each point.

"Ye see," said Jack, "I run onter this yer Santy Claus myself, last night. I cum out of the shanty about twelve o'clock, like enuff, and I see a man climbin' on the roof of the house. I 'lowed it might be santy, so I jest slipped behind a stump, and watched him. Sure 'nuff it were Santy. He had a big kinder bag on his back, chuck full of all kinds of truck. He had on a fur hat, and a kinder shirt made out of skin, an' a pair uv light 'pickydilly pants,' an' a pair of rubber boots. He clumb along the ridge-pole, an' kinder stopped by the stove-pipe just like he was comin' down. He histed up one foot and stuck it inter the pipe, but thar it stock. It wouldn't go down, an' Santy, he jest yanked it out, an' jumped up an' down, he wuz so mad. Then he come down from the ruff, an' kinder pushed agin the door an' it went in. I 'low he must have filled the stockin' then. Then he cum out and an' started of down the road playin' a Jew's-harp jest like this one here. I 'low it must hev ben the mate to it."

The little girl listened in open-mouthed wonder to Jack's story, but Smith amazed the crowd by begginnig to cross-question the narrator.

"Ye sed hed on a fur cap, didn't ye?"

"Well, yes, I 'low I sed so!"

"Did he have a big nose, an' kinder gray beard, an' red hair, an' a pair of kinder brown pickydilles?"

"Well, p'raps he did, an' then agin p'raps he didn't. What is it to ye ef if he did or ef it didn't; he didn't hev no call to put truck in your stockin', did he?" growled out Jack, for he felt that he was being pushed into a corner

Smith meekly admitted that "in course" it warn't nothing ter him, but he kinder had an idee that Santy Claus must hev looked jest like unto a man ez he knowed onct. The best feller to drink he ever saw. He had seen him with his own eyes set by a bar, and drink from a dozen ter twenty glasses, an' never get "set up." It beats all how that man could drink, and Smith sighed as he thought of the moral effect he might produce on the community if he could only drink an unlimited supply of whisky without "getting" set up."

This explanation settled all the bile in Jack's nature. To think of associating Santa Claus with a champion drinker was too much, even for him. Not that he was a special advocate of temperance. In fact if one had wished to give him a particular compliment, he had only to speak of him as Smith spoke of his friend. But to his mind Santa Claus was a different sort of personage. Besides there was danger of his mixing up his story, if the subject was continued.

He turned on poor Smith with his battery of sarcasm. "Shet up, you whelp, hang me, of you ain't mean 'nuff ter steal corn from afore a blind sow."

There was something so terrible in this statement that he cowered before it.

But Jack was not satisfied. "Jest roust out thet thar bottle o' yourn, an' I'll larn ye how ter drink without gitting set up."

Smith dared not refuse, but at once produced his bottle of Christmas beverage from its hiding-place in an old boot in the corner. No doubt he expected to see Jack empty it down his own throat, yet his mind may have been buoyed up with the thought that he might possibly get some little insight into the secret of his drinking [illegible] endurance. Jack [illegible] the bottle, but instead of drinking [illegible] it, he [illegible] out of the door, and deliberately broke it over a log, [illegible]

[illegible] boys [illegible] Christmas [illegible] night [illegible] theme, [illegible] he wrote on, covering page after page of paper. Jack watched him [illegible] for a while, and then broke in with: "Who [illegible] ye write to so much? Hang me ef ye don't sling more ink than a district. Must hev more gals than a dry goods clerk. I s'pose ye are quite a master among the wommin, ain't ye?"

Frank was obliged to confess that his knowledge of the habits and feelings of the sex was somewhat limited.

"Wall, what I was thinkin' on wus this. It kinder strikes me thet this yer doll-baby thet us two derned fools brung from Crystal last night is a blamed sight too slim fer such a kid. I'd like ter git a doll-baby with fillygrees an' fixin's. Now, ef you knows any wimmin ez kin give us pints on such things, why can't ye jest line out the ideas and draw out the pints. Then we kin dinder keep the the thing hot, an' cook up some lie about meetin' Santy Claus agin an' gittin' another doll-baby out of him."

The cook came in just then, and Jack moved away as if ashamed of his errand. But Frank wrote the letter to his mother, not asking for "pints," but simply telling the story of how he acted as Santa Claus.

Two weeks had gone by since Santa Claus came wandering into Cooney Camp, and aired his "pickadillies" on the roof of Smith's cabin. The visit of the good old saint was almost forgotten by most of the boys. Many weighty things had happened in the mean time.

The little "kid" remembered him however, time had made sad havoc with the presents he left. The candy had long since gone the way of their kind, and, revengeful as these things are apt to be, had made the little stocking-hanger sick in going. The jumping-jack had kicked his sound leg completely off, and now viewed the world with a most melancholy couktenance from the little shelf over the bed. Santa Claus himself could hardly extracted a tune from the Jew's-harp, while "Cracknose" had accidentially stepped on the tin whistle, and thus reduced its former note to a squeak. The poor little "doll-baby" had fallen and broken her nose off, much to the sorrow of the little "kid," who shed many tears over the misfortunes.

The worthy citizens of Cooney Camp were partaking of their early Supper. The great mountains of beans and salt pork which had confronted them at the beginning of the meal, had gone down before their active knives and forks.

But a silence, entirely new to the occasion. The faces of many of the men were dark with wrath.

The denizens of Cooney Camp felt that if any part of their etiquette was praiseworthy at all, it was their conduct at table. They fully believed in the physiological proposition that good nature and good digestion go hand in hand. A flow of delicate and refined wit could always be observed at their meals. Eating contests were largely encouraged, and the bare walls of the cook's shanty had looked down on many a gastronomic triumph.

The Suday meal had heretofore been particularly lively. News of the week and many pleasant little anecdotes were always retailed for the benefit of the company.

But now the men sat with glum faces, and ate their meal in silence. They felt that they had been imposed upon. The shadow of a great sorrow had fallen upon them, and they had just received fresh and most direct evidence that this world is all a fleeing show.

Three days before, the supply teamster had brought into camp a box marked: "Miss Julia Watson, care of T. Smith, Cooney Camp."

The box was simple enough in its way, but it fell like a shell into the social life of the camp. The excitement was raised to fever-heat when the teamster informed the crowd tnat the owner of the box would follow it on Sunday.

"Miss Julia Watson, care of T. Smith!" The lumbermen studied the address carefully. Perhaps they expected to obtain some information from the shakey black letters written on the cover. The society of young and beautiful ladies was in active demand in Cooney Camp. By a series of original arguments and inferences, the lumbermen came to the conclusion that "Miss Julia Watson" must be both young and beautiful.

That she was young was sufficiently proved by the fact that she was a "miss." The genus "spinster" was entirely unknown to Cooney Camp.

I do not know how they proved the other quality. Perhaps there was something in the name. Ever since Romeo risked his foolish neck climbing up to Juliet's window, the name has suggested both love and loveliness. The Cooney campers were probably not very thorough students of Shakespeare, [illegible]

[illegible] Barney and Bill went even so far as to engage in a fight for the possession of a paper collar. Though Barney at last secured possession of the coveted article, the black eye he received in obtaining it tended to neutralize the general effect it produced.

Nearly an hour before the time for the supply team, the boys gathered in front of the shanty, to give as much dignity as possible to the reception of the coming belle of Cooney Camp.

Some of the more poetic suggested the erection of an arch of green boughs over the road, but the proposal did not meet with popular favor.

The air of restraint that hangs over every formal reception gradually wore away, and the free and easy style of Cooney Camp returned. The boys relieved the tedium of their waiting by betting upon the general appearance of the lady.

"I'll bet ye," began Tom, "Thet she'll show up with yaller hair an' a pick-ed." There was some who differed with Tom. They seemed to be of the opinion that the young lady would appear with with black hair. Others were positive that her nose would be short, or, as they graphically expressed it, "stubbed." It is my opinion that each one unconsciously described his own ideal of feminine loveliness. Tom's Venus-like description of "yaller hair an' a pick-ed nose" seemed to suit the majority.

Jack was the only man in camp who looked with undisguised contempt upon the whole affair.

Possibly he feared the newcomer would absorb much of the attention now given to the little "kid." He was on the point of giving a sarcastic description of the charmes of the newcomer, when the supply team came slowly under the two trees that stood where the road entered the road entered the forest. Sure enough, on the seat by the driver was a woman.

The expectant crowd waited till the wagon slowly rolled over the rough road and came to a halt before them.

The belle of Cooney Camp had come. A thin woman, wrinkled and bent, sat on the seat of the wagon, and looked feebly about her. There was something pitiful and yet ludicrous in the sight.

The boys were too much overcome to speak. Bill could only mutter, "Be we gonter start a bone yard up here?" Jack laughed at the discomfiture of the boys, and "Cracknose" with a "Howdy, Aunt Jule?" stepped forward and helped the old lady from the wagon.

Her greeting was characteristic. She looked at the "Cracknose" critically for a moment, and then remarked thoughtfully, "It don't 'pear to me thet yer nose looks quite ser bad ez it did, though p'raps it is because I ain't gut my glasses on."

Smith received the delicate compliment in silence, and at once led the way to his own cabin.

It was a critical moment in the history of Cooney Camp. The boys were a little undecided what to do. Should they march in a body and mob the whole Smith family, or should they show their displeasure in some more forcible way?

Luckily, at this moment the cook blew a violent blast on the supper horn, and, impelled by the force of habit, the irate reception committee fell in and marched to the shanty.

As we before stated, the meal, so far as conversation was concerned, was a dire failure. It is hard, however, for a man with a full stomach to retain his anger long. The greatest hate and the most complete disappointment can seldom stand before a good dinner.

Toward the end of the meal the boys came to see something of the joke of the affair, and one or two even ventured to laugh with Jack.

They were about attacking an instalment of dried apple pies, when "Cracknose" came in with a small package in his hand.

"The ole lady," he stated, "hed this yer bundle gin her ter be brought, out just ez the team started."

"Pears like it must be fer you," and he handed the package to Frank. Then, seeing the angry eyes of the crowd fixed upon him, he rightly inferred that his presence could be easily dispensed with, and slipped out of the door.

Frank looked at the bundle curiously. It had come all the way from Boston. The boys watched him as he cut the string and [illegible] the paper.

"I 'low somebody's sent ye a box of cigars. I [illegible] or twist a year," [illegible] Bill.

The paper taken off disclosed a long pasteboard box. Frank [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] taken [illegible] carefully handled about for [illegible]

[illegible] the bottom were a few little picture books. These were sized by [illegible] literary members of the crowd, [illegible] explained the pictures for the [illegible] of the less educated. The big [illegible] were like children with a new [illegible]

"I'll be hanged," shouted Tom, "ef [illegible] ain't a picter of a young lad ez [illegible] clamb up ter the top of a high [illegible] fer to drink out frum the nuzzle." [illegible] enough they could all see it.

"But," put in Barney, "do ye mind [illegible] other young lad with his holt on the [illegible] unbeknownst ter the other?" [illegible] the crowd laughed in great glee [illegible] the thought of the ducking the first [illegible] would receive.

But the doll, after all, was the great [centre] of attraction. The little red [illegible] and cape, the blue eyes and the [hair], to use Jack's expression, "kinder got away with a carpet store."

After the toy had been handled about for a while, Jack suggested that it was time to "call it in."

He placed it carefully in the box, and announced his intention of taking it over to the "kid" at once.

"Ye see," he argued, "I hev ben swappin' lies with the kid afore, an' I kin kinder keep the thing hot. I'll tell the story, an' don't one of ye say a word or I'll lick him."

No one was disposed to question Jack's right to the position of spokesman.

Free thought and free sheech are two great elements of our national freedom; but when such a fist as Jack's is held in front of him, one is willing to look upon them as the fox regarded the grapes.

With Jack at their hoad the men adjourned to Smith's cabin. Those who could crowd into the room, while the others looked into the door and windows.

The antiquated "miss" had evidently just been giving the family an account of her journey.

Perhaps she looked upon the sudden arrival of the delegation as something in the light of a popular reception extended by the citizens of Cooney Camp to her.

In order the more fully to show her appreciation of the good-will of the company, she made haste to put on her "glasses," and through them she viewed Jack with undisguised admiration, which tended to embarrass him exceedingly.

The admiring glance of a lady's eye was enough by itself; but when it was magnified by passing through the convex lens of a pair of "glasses," to use their own expression, it "gut away" with him.

He began his remarks by saying that he 'low he warn't so derned small thet it tuck four eyes ter see him. Ef he was wuz, h'd grow a little.

This delicate information had the desired effect. The "glasses" were removed.

Jack then proceeded:

"Ye see when I ketched this yer Santa Claus on the ruff here a couple weeks ago, I didn't say nothing but it seemed to me thet the doll-baby he sent wuz pretty blamed slim. He had a big bag on his back, an' I see him sortin' out his truck. Thar wuz lots of big doll-babies thar with rale hair an' all the fillygrees 'Twan't none of my bizness, but I sez to myself, ef I ever see him agin, I'll tech him up a bit. I wuz out in the woods ter-day an' hang me ef I didn't come plump onter him. I knowed him by his piskdillie pants. I jest went up an' sez. Hev yer gut any terbacker? He sed he had an' opened his bag ter find some. When he opened it I see inside as find a doll-baby ez ever wus growed. I made up and told him jest dow the thing stood, an', I'll be hanged, ef he didn't do the square thing. He jest yanked out the doll-baby an' gin it ter me. He sed he had a long walk afore him, an' kinder asked me ef I wouldn't fetch it round. I told him I would and hang me ef it ain't here, and Jack placed the box in the little kid's hands, and then deliberately walked out of the cabin.

Most of the crowd followed him, but one or two, anxious to see what the kid would do, peeped in at the window.

The little one opened the box with wondering eyes, which grew wider at the sight of the doll.

As a woman takes her baby to her breast, so the little kid gathered the toy in her arms, and hugged it as she rocked back and forth in her chair.

At last she looked up and saw on the shelf over the bed the mutilated face of the [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] I'll [illegible]

The doll never went to the wall again. When the child went to bed that night she took her dolly with her. Just as the little eyes were closing in sleep, she murmured half to herself, "Dod bess Santy Claus for sendin' my dolly."

And Santa Claus will be blessed.

I wish I could close this story by telling how this little incident started a permanent reform in camp. Most stories end in this way, but mine cannot.

Jack and Bill and Tom and all the rest went back to their old ways. They drank and swore and fought as hard as ever, and yet I cannot help thinking that they were all made better and purer in some way by that little girl's prayer and its answer.

The oftener the tender, diviner chords of our being are touched, the more easily will they stir in sympathy for others.

The little "kid" will not forget that Christmas eve, nor the present Santa Claus sent by Jack.

Ah! if we only knew the pleasure and comfort we might give by a single word or look or generous act! if we only knew of the thousands of human beings who only needed the kindly and gentle impulse to lead them to purer and better lives, we might still act a Santa Claus, and make life one perpetual Christmas, more merry even than the celebration at Cooney Camp.

But we cannot, for our eyes are blinded.

Everybody thanked George Hackmatack when he was done.

Every one felt how exactly the story belonged to their party, blocked in as they were.

Old lumbermen were there, on their way down from the Rockies. They was how true the little story is to, man and to nature.

And I dare not say how many of the women were crying.

Mr. Vansandfoord gave time enough for talk, for questions and for sympathy, and then pretended to consult the great placard of the programme, of which the first sheet was pinned beside him, big enough for those who ran to read.

"Mrs. Frenchette will favor us with a ballad."

The little woman did not flinch an instant.

"The committee had no right to ask me for an original ballad," said she. "I never write ballads, and Tom does not. But I will sing an old Yankee ballad, which I learned on Thanksgiving day from a real Mayflower girl. She says the people in Plymouth County—I think that is the place—knew what the time was some two hundred years ago or less. You must all join in the chorus.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

For the sixteenth time in its history The Times greets all its readers with a happy New Year. During these many years it has gone into families that have seen one by one of its members drop away and new faces added, but still it is the same family. The paper has seen many changes. Proprietors, editors and workmen have come and gone but still the paper remains the same independent, fearless representative of public opinion that it has been in days gone by. Its future looks bright. We look to the new year with high hopes and bid all our friends make the 1st day one of joy.

Governor Cleveland is to be tendered a reception at the Buffalo City club on Saturday evening, January 10, following the charity ball of the 9th, at which the Governor will be present as chief patron.

It is reported that the New York Star has been purchased by a son of I. W. England, publisher of the New York Sun, on behalf of John R. McLean of the Cincinnati Enquirer. The price paid was $170,000. Nearly $750,000 has been sunk in it.

Congressmen who have opposed the admission of Dakota to the Union are recommended to read and reflect upon the despatches showing the present feeling in the territory. On all sides are heard expressions of wrath at the treatment which the application for admission received. There is even some wild talk of asking Manitoba to unite and form an independent republic. Such a position as this is ridiculous, of course, and is probably not seriously intended by any one. But he must be a sanguine Democrat who can see in the faces of the angry Dakotans any hope of gaining them as recruits for his party in the future.—[N. Y. Tribune.

THE EMPIRE STATE.

The Eagle Hosiery mills, Mechanicsville, burned Thursday. Loss $36,000; insurance $33,500.

The Western New York and Pennsylvania Chess association began its seventh annual meeting in Elmira, Monday.

Typhoid fever prevails to an alarming extent in the western portion of Ulster county. Scarlet fever is epidemic in parts of Sullivan.

It is reported that the Auburnian of Auburn will issue its last number today and that its subscribers will be furnished with the News.

The annual report of the Albany penitentiary shows that the gross earnings for the year were $101,489.64 ordinary expenses $92,117.33. During the past year the institution has paid $10,000 into the county treasury.

The hills and stubble about Cornwall, in Orange county, are alive with rabbits, and they have ceased to have any money value. The sudden cold spell brought them there by the thousands and they have been shot in such numbers that they are a glut in the market.

In providing a Christmas dinner for the convicts of Auburn prison, 100 pounds of butter were used, 20 gallons of milk, 300 pounds of crackers, several barrels of oysters, 50 gallons of molasses, 100 pounds of lard, 12 pounds of ginger, 20 pounds of soda and two pounds of cinnamon, besides the necessary amount of flour and other articles

One of the 30,000 barrel oil tanks at west junction, Elmira, exploded Friday morning, and both were soon a seething mass of flames. The shock was felt in Elmira, in many cases knocking dishes from the shelves and breaking mirrors. No one was hurt seriously, tho' houses near the tanks were badly damaged and riddled as if by cannon. The loss is $100,000.

Frank Tallman, a wealthy farmer of Castile, on his way to Rochester Monday morning, stepped off the train at Warsaw. In getting on the train his overcoat, which contained a revolver, swung against the railing of the platform, exploding the weapon and sending the ball into his intestines. The wound was pronounced fatal.

The schedule of assets of W. B. Fitch of Kingston, the largest blue stone dealer in the state, and who was one of the presidential electors on the democratic ticket at the recent election, shows a considerable excess over the liabilities. Some of the assets are classified as "nominal." Preferred creditors, it is said, will be paid.

Charles W. Folger, only son of the late secretary of the treasury, is reported to be critically ill of consumption at the [illegible] hotel in Geneva, and it is [illegible] that his death may occur [illegible]. He went to regain his health [illegible] Alexandria, Va., but it [illegible] good. His wife and five [illegible] with him.

Mary, wife of Volney Russell of Gaysville, hung herself Friday afternoon, during the absence of the rest of the family. She was dead when found. Coroner Potter of Cleveland held an inquest, and a verdict according to the above facts was given. She was subject to fits and despondency.

Peter Christiansen, arrested in Oswego for stealing a watch, attempted suicide in jail Tuesday by cutting his throat with a razor. He inflicted a serious wound, but will probably recover.

A few days ago James Gill and Alice Benton eloped from Oswego, got married, and started for Dakota. Both told the clergyman they were unmarried. Gill leaves a wife and four children. It is also said the Benton woman was also married to a young man named Root six years ago.

The coroner's jury in the Carpenter case, which has been in session for the past two weeks at irregular intervals, closed its labors at one o'clock Saturday morning, agreeing upon a verdict which was sealed and placed in the hands of the district attorney. The individual members of the jury decline to reveal the result of their deliberations, stating that they had made mutual pledges that the secret should be kept. No arrests have been made, and speculation is rife as to the conclusions arrived at.

The annual meeting of our cheese factory was held last Friday, and directors elected 1,678,851 pounds of milk has been received at this factory the past year. 164,020 pounds of cheese has been made, which sold on an average at 9 4-5 cents per pound. Ammonia in Baking Powders.

Scientific American.

Among the recent discoveries in sciencs and chemistry, none is more important than the uses to which common ammonia can be properly put as a leavening agent, and which indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food.

The carbonate of amonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the amonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power over soda and cream of tarter used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of amonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter, and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the amonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residuum whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have been quick to avail themselves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely made by the aid of ammonia, combined, of course, with other leavening material.

Ammonia is one of the best known [illegible] of the laboratory. [illegible]

[illegible] the American flag, floated where no other flag could float, at the height of 520 feet, the greatest height at which it has ever waved while affixed to a stable, terrestial object.

Upon this same scaffold two or three men have been nearer the blue vault above than they are likely to ever again to be while connected perminently with this mundane sphere, and we of them was prevented from becoming a second Lucifer, only through the total depravity of "inanimate things," for "that nail stuck out just far enough to catch" his coat sleeve, as in his reel from that dizzy height he was passing the last portion of the scoffold, and support him between earth and heaven until his fellow workmen could reclaim him.

The monument, though finished externally, save at its base, is by no means completed.

It is in form an obelisk, 555 feet high; at the base it is 55 feet square outside, and 25 feet square inside, thus leaving the walls 15 feet thick; on the inside the walls ascend perpendicularly, while on the the outside they recede to the height of 500 feet where their thickness is but 2 feet. At this height are two large apartures on each side; these and the two great doorways at the base, are the only openings in the massive walls.

From this point the pitch of the apex begins, and 55 feet above it terminates the monument in a point literally as sharp as a needle. Now considering the fact that the exterior is composed of heavy blocks of crystal marble backed up by gneiss and that the cap-stone itself is a block 3 feet square at the base, and 5 feet high, it would seem that this last statement could not be true, and it certainly could not were it not for the fact that the cap-stone is tipped with a bronze point; thus the monument becomes a most prominent electrope to this great terrestrial reservoir of electricity. Inserted in the inner walls, are the tablets of stone presented by the several states and territories of the union, also a dozen bricks from the birth-place of the man to whose memory the shaft is erected. The contributions to their collection from the Old World are from Itialy, Greece, Africa, Islands of Paros, and Naxas, China, Japan, Switzerland, Bremin, and Turkey; from Itialy, a rock from Mount Vesuvius; from Africa, a stone from the Temple of Carthage, a block of grnite from the Alexandrian library and a head sculpture by some ancient Egyptian and from the Island of Paros, a stome from the Temple of Esculapius. These tablets are arranged to correspond with the galleries of the iron staircase which is to wind its way up the great electric-lighted flue and afford one means of ascent while the steam elevator furnishes the other.

What the exterior formation at the base will be has not as yet been determined upon; it may be a grand colonnade, or it may be a series of gentle slopes with terrace walls; the latter plan can be easily and cheaply executed, as the monument stands on a small plateau, while the former would incur an expense equal to the cost of the shaft itself.

This small plateau, with its prodidious projection, is situated in a conspicious place near the banks of the Potomac in the centre of the monumental grounds, or park, which have an area of forty-five acres, it is also near the centre of the District of Columbia, as observed from the fact that the stone marking the centre of the District lies but a short distance to the west of the plateau. Furthermore the monument is on the same ground approved by Washington himself for the location of a national monument in the first plan of the city.

There is no danger now, since the apex has been completed, that a visitor to Washington will miss seeing the monument or fail to, recognize it when seen, for in whatever part of the city he may be he cannot turn around twice without discovering it, overtopping all the grand eclipices, but before the apex was added, one could easily imagine it to be a great furnace chimney to some of their huge structures of stone or brick. And when tourists shall be permitted to ascent, they surely will look for no other object of interest until they have from its lofty summit scanned the entire city. Thence they will see, on the east, the Capital with its great dome, surmounted by the coloussal statute of freedom, who, at the height of 397 feet posise herself with sword and shield; in the same line, but nearer, may be seen the Agricultural Department, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, National Museum and Smithsonian Institute; on the north-east the Interior and Post-Office Departments; on the north the the massive, weather-stained Treasury Department, the grand new building occupied by the State, War, and Navy Departments, and between these two, fronting the same street, the President's House, which is nearly white; to the west and south the great Potomac, flowing majectically and slow, while across the broad expanse one may see the Heights of Arlington, surmounted by the old house of General Robert E. Lee, to which approaches, leading through gateways formed of columns sawed from the ruins of the old Capitol, went in graceful curves among the giant oakes and forest of small head-stones which mark the resting place of 16,000 brave soldiers, slain in the late war.

So long is it since the building of this monument began that it has become historical, and those who read of it at the time of its infancy and supposed it would be finished in two or three years, had dismissed it from their minds, will now be curious to know [illegible]

[illegible] 490; Strasburg Cathedral 474 feet; St. Peter's, Rome, 458 feet; St. Stephen's, Vienna, 445 feet; Salisbury Cathedral, England, 400 feet; Antwerp Cathedral, 405 feet; St. Paul's, London, 404 feet, and the Milan Cathedral, 355 feet. So "it doth appear that ye Americans are an most aspiring people." D. H.

Magazines for 1885.

THE ATLANTIC.

The Atlantic monthly for Jan'y. 1885, comes to us filled with good things. The bound volumes of The Atlantic monthly are always of the pleasantest souveniers left behind by the departing year. In the pages of these books we found the fruit of an intelligent and wisely directed industry. The Atlantic is one of the few long established magazines which seem to grow prosperous and stronger with age. The general editor still gathers around him the ripest collection and most elegant wit of our time and nation. The Atlantic will continue to be as heretofore, a faithful reflection of the scope and progress of American literature.

THE CENTURY.

The Century for January is a notable number. The opening paper is a continuation of "Recent Architecture in America," these intelligently written and finely illustrated articles have attracted the widest attention. The present one upon "churches" occupying fifteen pages is an exhaustive paper and throws much light upon recent church architecture, views of some of the finest edifices in the land are given notably, Trinity church Boston. "The Freedman's Case in Equity" by Geo. W. Cable is a strong paper, and fully sustains the high claims awarded him by the reading people. Mr. Howell's serial, "The rise of Silas Lapham" grows in interest each month and bids fair to surpass in power any of his former efforts.

"Popular amusements," by Washington Gladden is a timely paper and will be read with an increasing interest. There are many more articles of merit. Topics of the Time and Open Letters always interest, while Bric-a-brac contains many gems of thought and wisdom and complete an admirable number of this Stearling magazine.

The Mechanical News for December 15 contains, among other features, a full page illustration of the new electric light at Hallett's point, by which the dangers of Hell Gate are dispelled; and a map is given, showing the new route which it is thought the commerce of New York will hereafter take. The Mechanical News is among the oldest and most popular journals of its class, being now near the close of its fourteenth year of publication. It is a sixteen-page paper issued twice a month, and every number is replete with valuable matter and choice illustrations. Its topics are of direct interest to mechanical and industrial readers and are treated not in a technical and abstruse, but always in a plain and practical style. The publishers have announced that every person who sends one dollar (the subscription price of the paper) before February 1st, 1885, will receive the Mechanical News one year, and either a 600-page dictionary or an 800-page cyclopedia, whichever he may choose. The dictionary or cyclopedia is a free gift to the subscriber, who is only required to send with his dollar, seven two-cent stamps for postage on the book. The offer is most liberal, and every mechanic should send for a copy of the paper, which will be mailed to him free, containing a full description of the valuable books between which he is invited to make his choice. Address the Mechanical News, James Leffel & Co., publishers, 110 Liberty street, New York.

Cure for Croup.—Use Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil according to directions. It is the best remedy for all sudden attacks of colds, pain and inflamation, and injuries.

Not long ago I went into a celebrated chop house kept by a once prominent actor, and asked for Basse's ale, or rather I asked for a toby of ale. The man brought me ale which I tasted and asked if it was genuine Bass's, Said he: "No, you did not ask for Bass's I brought you the ale that I think is better than Bass's" I looked at the man a minute and observed him to be an Englishman. Said. "Is it possible that any Englishman ever states an proposition favorable to his adopted land?" The man said raggedly: "I think that ale is better adapted to this climate than Bass's ale." If you don't like it I will drink it and bring you the bass." I looked at this queer object for a minute or two and said: "What are your views on this subject derived from?" "Experience," said the Englishman; "Bass's ale is too heavy for this climate. There are certain times when it is grateful to you. But if you are an ale drinker regularly you had better drink the Philadelphia ales."—[Gath in New York Tribune.

HIGHER PRICES FOR BUTTER

All dairymen who use Wells, Richardson's & Co's Improved Butter Color, agree that it increases the value of butter several cents a pound. It is pure and harmless, convenient for instant use, has no taste or odor, and gives a clear golden richness to butter. It is the very best butter coloring obtainable and is not expensive. In every state in the Union the demand for it is increasing.

We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of the Rural New-Yorker in another column. It is a wide-awake farmer's paper, owned and edited by live, practical working farmers, who own and farm 380 acres experimentally. On this all new things are carefully tested, and the result faithfully reported in the Rural. Really new and valuable seeds are selected from those tested, and annually from six to eight kinds are given free to its subscribers.

In this way it has done much to benefit the farmers and advance their interests. Our only wonder is that everybody does not take the Rural and share in these good things.

NEW YEARS AT FULTON.

We will all be supplied with amusement.

Through the Ice at a Race.

A trotting race was held Monday afternoon on the ice at the canal basin, and there were several entries from Oswego. Raymond Leonard was driving his roan pacer over the course at a brisk pace when the ice broke and both were submerged in more than six feet of water. There was a large crowd on the ice and bystanders seized the horse's head and held it above water while others pulled out Mr. Leonard. He was not much hurt and the horse, which was finally rescued, does not appear to have suffered much from its cold plunge. The race was of course broken up by the accident.—[Fulton correspondent to the Standard.

RINK NOTES.

The Ogdensburg Journal has the following interesting account of Profs. Burnell and Wilson, bicyclists, who will positively appear at the Fulton Rink to-night and to-morrow night:

The performances by Profs. Burnell and Wilson, the first as a roller skater and the latter as a bicyclist, at the roller rink Saturday night, was a splendid entertainment. At 9 p. m. Prof. Burnell made his appearance, going through the wonderful feats which may be performed on rollers, turning handsprings both forward and backward, going through a 14 inch hoop while in motion, doubled and single. After this exhibition Prof. Wilson came to the front. This time he rode a single wheel with perfectness and precision as wonderful as it was novel. This is a feat hard to believe without seeing and harder to believe after having seen. After demonstrating the skill of man in riding a single wheel he brought his Star bicycle and went through all the evolutions. The point on which Prof. Wilson excels all other riders who have appeared here, is his dash and the rapidity with which he drives his machine around the rink. The exhibition Saturday night was the very best we have yet seen.

U. S. Stevens and Warren Crofut, two of the proprietors of the Fulton Rink are in town this week.

Mr. Hadcock, the manager, informs us that he has secured all the necessary articles for playing polo and that a meeting will be held soon for the purpose of organizing a club.

The carnival at the rink Christmas night was largely attended and was a pleasant affair.

Henry Kendall sells Smith's genuine Philadelphia ale.

Doors Closed.

This morning the doors of McCully's harness shop were closed. An assignment has been made to H. E. Nichols. An inventory is being taken of the stock. Messrs. Lyon & Whitney of Syracuse are in town looking after their interests, being creditors of the firm. There are no preferred creditors.

An Astonishing Sight.

Opera house drug store.

Unclaimed Letters.

The following letters remain uncalled for in the post office at Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y. on December 31, 1884: [illegible]

Last Saturday was pay day at the factory.

The Times is always on sale at the News Room.

Kendall will set up a roast pig at his restaurant New Year's night.

Men are at work frescoing the academic department of No 3 school.

The Children of the Catholic Church enjoyed a Christmas tree last Sunday.

We publish an interesting letter this week from Asa Phillips who is visiting in the west.

A cart horse ran down First street Saturday evening at a break neck spead but fortunately did no damage.

The $50 toilet case which was raffled off at the Lewis House was won by George Brown, clerk at the Clark House.

A number of our societv poeple attended the party given by the Oswego Yacht Club in the Riverside rink at Oswego, last evening.

Commander Pentelow of Post Schenck, will go to Hannibal on Friday evening next to install the officers of the Hannibal post. The installation will be followed by a camp fire.

W. B. Phelps jr., and wife, H. Irving Fay, Ed. Frary of Utica, Miss Frary and Miss Peck attended the skating carnival at the Fulton rink Thursdav afternoon.—[Oswego Times.

The genial face of our former pastor Rev. J. S. Riggs, now Greek professor in Auburn Theological seminary, was seen upon our streets Monday. Mr. Riggs supplied the pulpit at grace church, Oswego on Sunday.

Col Sage, formerly of Fulton, of the old 110th regiment now a resident in Ohio, made a flying visit to the city yesterday, stopping at the Doolittle house. Col. Sage is now an extensive railroad contractor in Ohio and his business here was with the Kingsford Iron Works in relation to the purchase of land excavators.—[Oswego Times.

There will be an impromptu party at the Lewis House to-morrow evening. It is probable that those who attended the party given there a few weeks since will not fail to improve this second opportunity of enjoying themselves. The party together with making and receiving calls will turn New Years day into one of unpredicted pleasure for the people of Fulton.

A large crowd gathered at the rink last evening with the expectation of seeing Peck's Bad Boy and his Pa. At about 9 o'clock Mr. Stevens, one of the proprietors announced that through some misunderstanding the attraction had failed to appear. The managers are wholly at fault for their non-appearance and did the fair thing by returning to every person at the rink a ticket good for any attraction excepting the one to-night and to-morrow night.

After Santa Claus had put a cabinet organ, a seal skin sacque, a lap robe, a box of gloves and a Webster's unabridged dictionary in a Fulton girl's stocking, and saw that it wasn't half full, he was seen to climb out on the roof, sit down on the snow and weep.—[Oswego Palladium.

We could think of but one girl who might claim this stocking and we timidly enquired of her if the story was true. She indignently replied that it was snow such thing.

A numerous delegation of the Standard Oil company, including President Wheeler of New York, came from Oswego on a special over the Ontario & Western road yesterday afternoon. They were accompanied by Messrs. F. A. Emerick and J. F. Herrick, vice president and superintendent, respectively, of the Oswego Manufacturing Company. They come to look over the works here which ceased operations when the new works started in Oswego. Nothing was learned of the specific object of their visit but as heretofore stated in this correspondence it is understood that the Fulton manufactory will again start up at no distant day. The captalists interested express themselves highly pleased with their new works in Oswego, and also with the fine water power and location in Fulton. —[Fulton correspondent to Standard.

TOBACCO CASES.

[illegible]

[illegible] left for Fulton, [illegible] there until Wednesday [illegible], when we left for an extended trip out west to be absent for a year. We left Syracuse at 7:40 p. m., Wednesday evening and arrived here Thursday afternoon Dec. 18th.

We found Toledo a flourishing city at the western extremity of Lake Erie, pleasantly situated on an elevated plain on the banks of the Maumee river, about four miles from its mouth. The river affords a spacious and safe harbor for the largest steamers and vessels. Toledo can boast of twenty-three railroads including branches, and ten of the largest steam grain elevators in the country. Toledo has seven Trunk street railroads, not including branches. The Inter-state fair grounds are also located here, and beautifully situated. One of the largest rolling mills of the west has been started here recently, which is evidence of enterprise, progress and prosperity. Toledo has twenty-three publications, five of which are daily newspapers, the rest being tri-weekly, weekly, monthly and quarterly. The citizens of Toledo have an everlasting faith in the Christian religion. For proof of the same we can only mention that she does possess sixty-six churches and religious societies—a place of worship for less than every 1000 of her men, women and children. The directory is authority for the population of this city, which places it at 73,260.

The wants and comforts of the insane are looked after with religious care and attention. Toledo has twenty-two public schools with twenty church and private schools, ten hospitals and asylums, ten cemeteries and a great number of literary and benevolent societies. Among the schools, Toledo Business college stands very prominent doing a noble work, preparing the young men of the city and state to take prominent places in business.

Toledo has some public parks and promises more in the near future. Her water works are an object of some curiosity, and her fire department is excellent, comprising seven steam engines, also one Babock Fire extinguisher, seven hose companies with two hook and ladder companies. Her river is spanned by six railroad and highway bridges. On the east side of the river is the Sixth ward which now promises in the future to be the seat of enterprise and progress, as the long looked for new river bridge has permanently made the Sixth ward a positive factor of Toledo. The bridge is a credit to the city and the builders alike. The draw of this bridge is 300 feet in length, capable of admitting the largest ocean steamers if they should come this way. Who can tell? There is a street railway double track on the bridge and ample room for teams and foot passengers. When lighted up by electric light the harbor cannot help but present a very beautiful appearance. At the proper season of the year there is an excellent line of steamers plying between here and all points on the upper and lower lakes, offering great inducements to excursionists at very low rates.

Toledo has eighteen labor organizations, three libraries and two encampments of the Sons of Veterans.

The mortuary list from April 1st 1883, to April 1st, 1884, was 805, 78 of whom were infants. There are a quite a number of places in Toledo where the man who wants "a drink" can have it. The greater part of the men engaged in this business have paid $300 as a license. The aggregate being $57,000 paid.

The workhouse in this city affords as much cheer and comfort to the inmates as any city of its size, and is almost self-sustaining. The county infirmary is a very commodious building, and the needs of its inmates are most sacredly attended to. Her retail and jobbing trade is very active, as her twenty odd railways are continually taking to and from her stores the product of the farm, the forest, the factory and the mine.

Want of space prevents us from particularizing on many more of this city's public buildings and beautiful church edifices. We intend to take a trip up into Michigan for two or three weeks, and then return and remain here until May, after which we expect (if spared) to make a tour of Manitoba and Dakota having a daughter in Morris, Manitoba, and another in Ernest, Dakota, also two sons in DeSweet, Dakota. In our travels we may see something that may be interesting to your readers and may write again if this should be acceptable.

Yours, Asa Phillips.

An Affectionate Tribute.

By request we publish the following sympathizing letter received by W. W. Wells upon the death of his wife;

Indiana, Pa.. April 24, 1884.

My Dear Uncle Wallace: May I with many, many others, offer my sympathy? Cold and inadequate all these words may seem, written on paper, my heart dear Uncle, is deep in its feeling for you in your sorrow.

God has certainly been very severe in his affliction on you. He has hung one of his blackest clouds over you; but can you not feel, that through it all the stars are shining, and dear Aunt is happier than any of us. In your trouble, you certainly must find comfort, in knowing you made her life very happy, and that in you she had what many a poor woman would lose her life to gain—the love of a true manly heart. She loved and was loved "and were every one for whom she did some kind act, to bring a flower to her grave, she would sleep to-night in a wilderness of flowers." May you have hope and courage to bear your sorrow, is the wish of Your Loving Neice,

Addie Quigg.

[illegible] stables, but not too warm; ventilation to control the temperature and admit fresh air, but not directly on the animals; floor well littered, with fine vegetable material to absorb fluids and odors, aided by plaster, thus securing a clean, dry, soft bed to lie and stand on; carding, plenty of good water, conveniently obtained; occasional out door airing and exercise, without rash exposure to cold and wet, getting as much sunlight as possible and avoiding the great changes of temperature; kind treatment, making the cow feel at home. Give food to meet her requirements; if in calf, let the nitrogenous element be well represented, and let the feed be largely of a succulent character, to keep in line with the summer diet, such as roots and ensilage, with early cut clover, well cured. Feed early and late, and a few times during the day, keeping the cow mostly employed with slight feeds between the two principal rations, the night serving for rest.

It is a great fault with many farmers to allow the cattle the range of their farm, thus getting more exercise than is good for a milch cow, trampling the field and making muddy paths, while the frost bitten food that they pick up is of reduced benefit, and leaves the fields bare and exposed to the winter's severity. It is an error to suppose that late grass, frost bitten and bleached, is of more value as feed than for plant food and protection. Leaving the grass unfed is in effect, green manuring, without the expense of turning it under.

By thus favoring our fields, we at the same time favor our cows also. By putting them up early requires attention, but pays well, as now the time can be well afforded, and the cows are continued in good condition without break, yielding a continued liberal supply of milk. All rash changes in feed and in treatment should be avoided, and above all, do not intermit the kindness in the least, without which a milch cow will never do her best. There is nothing now in all this, which makes it so much the better, as it has the experience of the most successful dairymen, yielding the largest quantity of the best milk and an increased percentage of butter from it, besides benefitting the cows.—[Cor. Country Gentlemen.

Remedy for Chicken Cholera.

The Department of Agriculture publishes the following remedy, recommended by Dr. Salmon, for preventing this distructive disease that annually carries off so many thousand fowels:

"For this disease a very cheap and most effective disenfectant, is a solution made by adding three pounds of sulphuric acid to forty gallons of water (or one-fourth pounds of sulphuric acid to three and a half gallons of water,) mixing evenly by agitating or stirring. This may be applied to small surfaces with a small watering pot, or to larger grounds with a barrel mounted on wheels and arranged like a street sprinkler. In disinfecting poultry houses the manure must be first thoroughly scraped up and removed beyond the reach of the fowls; a slight sprinkling is not sufficient, but the floors, roosts and grounds must be thoroughly saturated with the solution so that no particle of dust, however small, escapes being wet. It is impossible to thoroughly disinfect if the manure is not removed from the roosting places. Sulphuric acid is very cheap, costing at retail no more than twenty-five cents a pound; and at wholesale but five or six cents; the barrel of disinfecting solution can, therefore, be made for less than a dollar, and should be thoroughly applied. It must be remembered two, that sulphuric acid is a dangerous drug to handle, as when undiluted it destroys clothing and cauterizes the the flesh wherever it touches."—American Farmer.

Steaming Food for Farm Animals.

It is, we think, generally admitted that the grain for stock is greatly increased in value by steaming and cooking before feeding. Mr. Joseph Watts, of Amity, Oregon, who has been engaged for the last three years in buying hogs and fattening and killing them for the market, gives some of the results of his experiments in that line. He fattens from 100 to 250 hogs at a time, feeding barley and sometimes wheat. In his experience he finds that it takes about six pounds of raw wheat, or nearly seven of barley to make a pound of pork, and that a hog when fattening will consume that many pounds of wheat daily for each 100 pounds of live weight. Ground barley, steamed in a vat four hours is the feed now used. The grain fed is ground on the premises, a family grist mill and a six-horse power being used for the purpose. The result of feeding steam cooked food, as tried by Mr. W., is very satisfactory, requiring one-third less feed to grow the same weight of pork as compared to using raw food.

A cheap and convenient steamer for this purpose can be made by taking 1¼ by 14 or 16-inch lumber and making a trough, flaring at the top, with ends grooved in and a bolt run through to hold the sides firmly up to their place. The bottom is made of stove-pipe iron; closely nailed over the out side edges. A furnace upon which the though is to rest may be built either of brick or by digging a trench in ground. An old [illegible]

[illegible] the water that may flow into it naturally. The water which by drainage is [illegible] an additional [illegible] and no wonder that when the conditions are the most favorable, this aggregation of waters should overflow the banks and become vastly destructive. More land is reclaimed by drainage every year, and consequently the liability to destructive floods annually increased. Another probable result of the extension of this system is the drying up or lowering of springs in the ground which supply our wells. This curtailment, however, may prove only temporary or intermittent. So by drainage we may by more than one way destroy nature's balance. As we by axe and spade increase the productiveness of our land, by them we also increase the disaster of the floods.—[Lewis Ostenson, Dodge Co., Wis.

Pig Pork From Sweet Apples.

I had ten trees that hung full of small sweet apples; so the middle of July I bought two pigs at $2 each, about seven weeks old, and put them with another bought in may at the same price. I fed from eight to twelve quarts of apples a day, and no meal and but little milk, sometimes giving water and apples. The pigs were kept in a pen on a plank floor, as is the common practice here. Besides sweet apples I fed windfalls of Tetofsky and Oldenburg. The pigs collectively grew a dollar a week in value. The May pig the middle of September weighed 152 and sold for $9.12. The others were estimated at 6 cents per pound, as they could have been sold for that. I fed apples to the middle of October. I estimate they were worth 25 to 30 cents a bushel to feed pigs at the growing age that mine were. I don't think for old hogs they would pay so well. For consuming apples profitably I think pigs that come about June 1 will be ready to eat apples the middle of July, and ought to make such growth if fed meal in November as to be ready to kill December 1 and dress from 125 to 150 pounds. A tree that is a profuse bearer of small sweet apples is more profitable than the tree with a few specimens of very large, nice fruit.—[Z. E. Jameson, Orleans Co., Vt.

Uncongenial Stocks.

This headline might furnish a text for quite a long paper. Those who have tested the various theories offered from time to time for improving fruits by means of working on closely allied genera, are fully aware of the unreliability of choosing any root but their own for the purpose. There are a few notable exceptions, it is true, as, for instance, pear on quince and plum on peach, but beyond these it is rare to find any species of fruit that is benefitted by the change. Even peach on plum is objected to by many growers, and pear on thorne, as well as pear on apple, are now set down as failures, financially. It has always been asserted by our botanical teachers that members of the same natural order of plants may be freely budded or grafted on each other. While granting that it is possible to perform the operation successfully, the subsequent health of the new plant is another matter, and practically, the latter can be made to survive but a very short time. I am led to these remarks by the fact that so many experimenters in gardening rush into print as soon as they find the union between the scion and stock complete, instead of patiently waiting a few years to ascertain whether any benefit has arisen from the work.—[Josiah Hoopes.

Soothing a Nervous Man.

Barbers ought not to make themselves too agreeable to their customers. One of this ilk, who is a wonderful conversationalist, and can operate with his own chin and on the chin of his victim at the same time, told a refreshing story to his victim. The victim was a nervous man, and was always afraid that some dreadful accident would happen to his jugular vein when the reckless razor was rushing wildly over his countenance. The affable barber saw the condition of affairs and tried to soothe the poor fellow with a story. "Sir," he said, in sepulchral tones. "the changes that happens in life is awful. Last Wednesday, sir, a man about your size was settin' in this very chair, and I was shavin' him. And would you believe it, sir, I saw him on Saturday afternoon, yes, sir, on Saturday afternoon, a regular corpse, sir." The lathered man leaped from that chair with a gash in his face, and with a hasty expression of opinion left the shop. Yes, cheerful conversation does assist a nereous man to get over the rough places in life, without a doubt.

The Cowboy on Roller Skates.

"I am more used to riding horseback, and as soon as I straddled the layout I was wishing I had the buck rein, because I expected them to stiffen their knees and go to bucking, but they didn't. I walked them over to the other end of the corral to gentle 'em a little, and directly they started off at an easy canter, and were coming around back right through the herd, and there was a dude there with a stiff hat who was trying to cut out a Polled Angus heifer in a blue dress, and I fouled, roped both my legs in a hoop skirt, and it had me stretched out, ready for branding, quicker'n a spring calf can bawl with his mouth open and his lungs stretched. But I got up and got on again, and you could scarcely notice them wabble. Of course [illegible]

[illegible] swallows whatever is presented to it and very rarely occasions trouble. Though fowls must be provided with a roof and decent habitation, and supplied with corn, which is costly, the cottage garden waste and the snails and slugs which are generated there, with the kitchen scraps and offal, furnish the hardy ducks with the means of subsistence. And at night they require no better lodging than a nook in an open shed. If a habitation be expressly made for them it need not necessarily be made more than a few feet in height nor of better materials than wattles and clay mortar, a door being useless, unless to secure them from thieves.

Carlyle says "laughter is sympathy." If this is so, the fellow who straddles painfully across the skating rink floor, and then sits down so suddenly that he telescopes his spine up into the back of his head, gets all the sympathy the occasion calls for.—[Lowell Citizen.

How Watch Cases are Made.

Imitation always follows a successful article, and imitation is one of the best proofs of real honest merit; and thus it is that the James Boss' Gold Watch Case has its imitators. Buyers can always tell the genuine by the trade-mark of a crown, from which is suspended a pair of TRADE MARK scales. Be sure BOTH crown and scales are stamped in the cap of the watch case. Jewelers are very cautious about endorsing an article unless they not only know that it is good, but that the character of the manufacturers is such that the quality of the goods will be kept fully up to standard.

[illegible] the train in a hurry and took his seat in a vacant section. He was puffing and blowing with excitement of one sort or the other, and his first move after taking his seat was to throw the window of his section wide open. A young gentleman sitting behind him, who had a young lady with him, probably his sweetheart, without saying a word, leaned over and shut the window down. He evidently did not intend that his girl should suffer from cold without some sort of protest. The hot and flustered old fellow turned half round in his seat, gazed for a second at the young one, and then threw the window wide open again. The young man leaned over again, still without saying a word, and shut it. Another half turn in the seat another insolent look at the impertinent youngster, and and then the old fellow leaned his shoulders back over the arms of the section and, throwing his heels upward, dashed both of them through the glass of the window, growling: "Now open or shut it as you please."

"You are an infamous vagabond, sir," cried the lady's escort. "and I'll report you and have you arrested for this outrage." All the other occupants of the the car looked their amazement and disguist, and the conductor just coming in the offended youth cried: "Here conductor, see what this fellow has done; I demand that you get his name and have him arrested at the next station. I'm going to Syracuse, but I'll wait at the next town to give information against him." The offender turned half round once more and said: "Its all right; I'll go on to Syracuse with you and you can have me arrested there."

The next station was reached, and a St. Louis gentleman who had witnessed the trouble called out to the conductor:

"Are you not going to arrest that man?"

"Arrest——! Do you think I look like I want to lose my job? That's Dean Richmond, and he owns the road."

Tourgees Appeal.

Albian W. Tourgee delivered his new lecture before the Chicago Association of ex Privates of war last Friday night, in which he made the prediction that unless the negroes were speedily enlightened, they would rise in rebellion against the whites of the South. He said that at present eight States 4,000,000 of white people, contained 4,000,000 of colored and statistics showed that the blacks were increasing over the whites at a rate of one per cent a year. Emancipation did not give independence to the slave nor did they possess a migatory disposition. They remained at home, subsisting on small fare and small comforts, but multiplied and increased. The nation took from him as a race all he could achieve and gave him only the principals of duty. The negroes were asked to come to the rescue of the Union in the hour of its peril and 220,000 fought in the uniform of the Nation's soldiery. In the South 80 per cent of the colored men were unable to read the ballots which they cast and 20 per cent of the whites were in a like condition. Slavery and rebellion were minor questions compared to what was before the country to-day. It required national action to meet the vast re[illegible]
